Board Fixes Pay of 10,000 D. C. Women At $13 to $17

Minimum for Waitress Is Lowest But Tips Are Excluded.

New Scale Will Go Into Effect May 8

Telephone and Elevator Operators, Clerks in Highest Bracket.

Waitresses were guaranteed a weekly wage of $13.25 by the Minimum Wage Board yesterday, and in no case will gratuities or tips be included as any part of the wage.

The official recommendations by the board, which will affect approximately 10,000 women workers, also included:

Sixteen dollars and 50 cents weekly scale for counter girls, food checkers, salad girls and bus girls.

Fourteen dollars and 50 cents per week for vegetable girls, dish and glass washers, chambermaids, parlor maids, linen room girls, cleaners, janitresses and charwomen.

The new scale for women workers in the hotel, restaurant and allied industries will become effective May 8, 60 days after the regular public hearing at which time objections, if there are any, will be heard.

Hourly Wages Fixed.

The recommendations specifically state:

1. That the rate for telephone operators, elevator operators and clerical workers in the hotel, restaurant and allied industries shall be $17 for each standard work week of from 40 to 48 hours and that the hourly rate for those who work less than 40 hours be 40 cents per hour.

2. That the rate for counter girls, food checkers, salad girls and bus girls shall be $16.50 for each standard work week of from 40 to 48 hours a week and that the hourly rate for such workers who work less than 40 hours be 40 cents an hour.

$15.50 for Dishwashers.

3. That the rate for vegetable girls, dish and glass washers, chambermaids, parlor maids, linen room girls, cleaners, janitresses, charwomen and all such workers shall be $14.50 for each standard work week of from 40 to 48 hours and that the hourly rate for those who work less than 40 hours shall be 35 cents an hour.

4. That the rate for waitresses shall be $13.25 for each standard work week of from 40 to 48 hours and that the hourly rate for those who work less than 40 hours shall be 40 cents an hour.

It was further recommended by the board that "for workers whose

Supreme Justices To Get Townsend 'Contempt' Appeal

The United States Supreme Court will be petitioned to pass on the conviction of Dr. Francis E. Townsend, founder of Old Age Pensions, Ltd., for "contempt of the House," his attorneys announced yesterday following the ruling of the United States Court of Appeals in affirming the action of District Court in finding Townsend guilty of stalking out of a hearing before being excused.

Dr. Townsend was sentenced by Justice Peyton Gordon to pay a fine of $100 and serve 30 days in the District Jail. Because of novel questions contained in the appeal, Justice Gordon permitted him to remain on bond. The conviction was obtained March 12, 1937, though Townsend had walked out of the hearing of a House committee investigating old-age pension plans May 21, 1936.

Two Pilots Escape As Planes Collide

Honolulu, Feb. 7 (AP).—Two Army airplanes collided at an altitude of 5,000 feet near here today. One pilot parachuted to safety and the other landed his plane.

The plane flown by Lieut. F. O. Rindon, Army Air Corps Reserve, of Liberal, Kans., hit one flown by Lieut. Watson M. Frutchey, of Upper Montclair, N. J. The stabilizer of Frutchey's plane was destroyed. Frutchey promptly jumped.

A. F. L. Revokes Charters of 3 C.I.O. Affiliates

Proclaims Cutting of Last Ties With Mine, Smelter and Glass Unions.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., Feb. 7.—The American Federation of Labor announced today the complete ouster of three big unions affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization, presaging intensified warfare between the two rival labor organizations.

The A. F. L. charters of the United Mine Workers, the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and the Flat Glass Workers were revoked, opening those fields for A. F. L. affiliates. The charters of these and other C. I. O. unions had been suspended by the A. F. L. a year and a half ago, but the latest action severed their last ties.

John L. Lewis, head of the mine union and of the C. I. O., issued a statement at Washington saying "the action is unimportant and without significance" and said he would have no further comment.

Miners' Move Brings Action.

The A. F. L. executive council exercised the power given it at the Denver convention last October and voted to recall the charters last Friday, but the move was not announced until today pending receipt of a certified copy of proceedings at the miners' convention in Washington last week.

The mine union amended its constitution to give allegiance to the C. I. O. instead of the A. F. L., and the federation's executives construed this as "severing all affiliations and relationships with the A. F. L. and in fact declaring the A. F. L. an organization dual to the C. I. O."

Claim $2,000,000 Given C. I. O.

The ouster resolution also charged that A. F. L. efforts "to effect unity and peace in the ranks of organized labor have been frustrated by the arbitrary and dictatorial action of the officers of the U. M. W., who, by reason of the financial support given to the C. I. O., have had from the very beginning the complete veto power over all its policies and decisions and have been in actual and absolute control of its leadership."

On the basis of a U. M. W. auditors' report, A. F. L. officials contend the miners contributed $2,000,000 to the C. I. O. in the last two years.

William Green, president of the A. F. L., said he would drop the membership in the miners' union he has held since it was chartered 48 years ago. The U. M. W. has threatened to expel him and has ordered its executive board to try him for "treason."

Russian Fliers Hit Mountain Trying to Save Arctic Scientists.

State Funeral Ordered for Victims; Families Pensioned.

By the United Press.

Moscow (Tuesday), Feb. 8.—Thirteen Russians, who had asked to participate in attempts to rescue four scientists from a rapidly disintegrating ice floe in the Arctic Sea, were killed when the dirigible "U. S. S. R. V6" crashed into a mountainside in the barren reaches of northwestern Russia, the government announced today.

Three of the dirigible's crew of 18 were injured gravely and two escaped injury.

No date or hour of the crash was announced in the official government communique.

It was understood that it occurred some time Monday.

Heading for Arctic.

The dirigible was en route from Moscow to Murmansk on a trial flight preliminary to soaring over the frozen Arctic to seek the scientists.

The government's announcement said that the ship had crashed into the side of a mountain at Kandalaksha, on the edge of the Kandalaksha Gulf, 177 miles south of Murmansk. The gulf is an arm of the White Sea.

The government decided to make use of the dirigible in the rescue, it was reported, after all radio communication with the four men broke down, indicating they may be fleeing through a violent storm in an effort to reach the coast of Greenland, 50 miles away.

Cause of the crash was not determined definitely in the government's announcement, but the ship was believed to have hit a mountain because of poor visibility. The ship's motors were said to have been working smoothly.

"A state funeral for the victims has been ordered by the Soviet Government," the communique said. "The families of the victims have been awarded 10,000 rubles each and life pensions.

"The dirigible was piloted by Capt. Gudovantzev. It was constructed in 1934 with a volume of 19,000 cubic meters, length 105 meters and diameter 18 meters."

Preparations to rescue the marooned scientists went forward despite the tragedy. The government planned to press into service its most powerful icebreaker in an effort to rescue the men.

Scientists Feared Lost.

The icebreaker Murman, equipped with two airplanes and food enough for six months, will be dispatched from Murmansk to join two other icebreakers attempting to reach the men. The planes are equipped with skis to land on ice and one of them also carries floats so that it can land on water.

The headquarters of the Northern Sea Route Administration, admitting grave fears for the lives of the scientists and their little dog Jolly, said its last contact with them was 24 hours ago when Ivan Papanin, leader of the group, reported that they were packing their supplies and equipment.

The equipment, Papanin reported, was being loaded on sleds indicating that the group sought to transfer to another larger floe.

United Mine Workers Each Assessed $2 Extra

The United Mine Workers executive board has ordered a $2 special assessment on all members, one dollar to be collected this month and another in March.

In a letter to all members, the board said:

Flesh Beats Spirit by a Lunch At Sirovich Art Plan Hearing

By Sidney Olson.

The age-old battle, flesh vs. the spirit, was fought out for five and one-half hours over the green baize-covered tables of the House caucus room yesterday before flesh took a close decision.

Representative William I. Sirovich (Democrat), New York, chairman of the House Patents Committee, triumphed narrowly at noon over things of the flesh—as represented by his desire to go to lunch—only to lose out in the late afternoon when his inner man conquered things of the spirit—as represented by his bill to create a Department of Arts, Science and Literature.

"It almost got me at noon," he confessed, "as I didn't have much breakfast."

Chairman Sirovich, whose committee got off to a dashing start at 10 a. m. yesterday in hearings on his bill, remained steadfast in the chairman's seat even when all of his witnesses except the person testifying, all of his committee and all but three reporters deserted his

Clergy 'Quarantined' For Niemoeller Trial

Nazi Court Refuses Bold Demand to Make Its Hearing Public.

By the United Press.

Berlin, Feb. 7.—Nazi secret police tonight clamped a "quarantine" on confessional Protestant Church officials throughout Germany after the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, brought to trial before a secret court on charges of sedition, upset the proceedings by shouting demands for a public hearing.

"I want to prove that I am no traitor to my country!" shouted the 46-year-old pastor, who was a submarine commander in the World War and has led the Protestant Church's battle to prevent the Nazis from overthrowing traditional German Christianity.

The gaunt-faced pastor, who has been held in Moabit Prison for seven months, showed that he had lost none of his defiant attitude.

He demanded, before five black-robed special judges who wore the Nazi swastika emblazoned on their breasts and opened the proceedings with the prescribed shouts of "Heil Hitler!" that his supporters crowding the corridors outside be permitted in the courtroom.

The judges made quick work of rejecting Niemoeller's plea for a public trial and ordered everybody out of the huge courtroom

Roosevelt Calls In Deadlocked Tax Bill's Foes

White House Move to Break Committee Jam Is Indicated.

Intervention by the President to break the Ways and Means Committee deadlock on proposed penalty taxation of family and "closely-held" corporations was indicated yesterday.

Opponents of the so-called penalty tax have claimed a 14 to 11 voting majority in the committee against the provision imposing a steeper rate on certain corporations controlled by ten or fewer persons.

Representative Claude A. Fuller (Democrat), of Arkansas, one of the outstanding opponents of the penalty, yesterday was called to the White House, but, on leaving, declined to discuss his views.

Last week Representative John W. McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, leading opponent of the penalty tax, was a White House visitor. McCormack at the time described it as a "social call." The Massachusetts Representative is still opposing the special levy.

Another White House caller yesterday was Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, who has supported the sub-committee report by Representative Fred Vinson (Democrat), of

A.F.L. Man Leads In Printers' Poll

Indianapolis, Feb. 7 (AP).—The International Typographical Union began a vote this week that may indicate whether it will remain in the American Federation of Labor or join the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Local units are choosing between their president, Charles P. Howard, who is secretary of the C. I. O., and C. M. Baker, of San Francisco, A. F. L. partisan. The election will be May 25, but local unions are indicating their preference in advance, because indorsement by 50 locals is necessary to get a candidate's name on the ballot.

Unofficial returns from 16 cities showed 10 locals favored Baker and 6 were for Howard.

Farm Bill Faces Triple Danger In House Today

'Gag Rule' Voted, Bloc Will Seek to Return It to Committee.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Administration's farm bill, patched and rewritten in conference after nearly three months of controversy, today faces squally reception in the House and a threatened coalition of dairy and urban labor blocs to sidetrack it.

The old charge of "gag rule" was revived as the House Rules Committee voted the measure right of way under a rule permitting only four hours of debate and waiving all points of order against the bill.

The first test will come on the rule, to be voted on after a single hour of debate. If the rule is defeated, the bill still can be considered under normal rules of the House. If the rule is approved, the Administration leadership must beat down a drive to send the bill back to committee.

It was on a recommit motion that the Administration's wage-hour bill,

King Presents Bill to Repeal Neutrality Act

Resolutions Offered to Make Hull, Roosevelt Reveal Policies.

The mounting intensity of Congressional interest in the Administration's foreign policy brought in quick succession these developments yesterday:

Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, introduced a bill to repeal the neutrality act of 1935, as amended in 1937, on grounds the act "is a complete failure," and "our foreign policy must be carefully re-examined."

Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, told the House Naval Affairs Committee that the Navy "has no foreign commitments" and that the United States fleet "stands on its own feet."

Senator Hiram W. Johnson (Republican), of California, introduced a resolution demanding that Secretary of State Cordell Hull reveal whether the United States has any foreign alliances or "gentlemen's agreements."

Policy Explanation Asked.

Representative Harry Sauthoff (Progressive), of Wisconsin, introduced a resolution demanding that President Roosevelt explain to Congress the Administration's foreign policy.

House leaders disclosed they intend to bring to the House floor for swift passage Friday the Hill bill preventing wartime profiteering and establishing the President as a virtual dictator of industry in wartime.

Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, introduced a resolution asking Secretary Hull to determine the authority for an Australian newspaper dispatch asserting the United States had given Great Britain information on Japanese fortifications.

In Tokyo the foreign and navy ministers said yesterday that no decision had been reached on a reply to formal queries by the United States, Great Britain and France on the Japanese naval building program, but Domei, a Japanese news agency, reported that officials had decided against disclosing warship details.

Appeals Court Ends 1-Yr. Stay, Permits Milk Price Fixing Here

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday set aside injunctions granted a year ago in the District Court outlawing Federal regulation of milk distribution in this area.

The decision represented a victory for Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and a defeat for 12 independent Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers who obtained injunctions that held up a price-fixing agreement drafted under the amended agriculture adjustment act.

Under this agreement, all milk received by handlers or distributors was classified and minimum prices to be paid producers were fixed. A tax on distributors was provided to finance administration of the agreement.

Attorneys for the Department of Agriculture, in their arguments before the Court of Appeals, contended that the 12 dairy farmers in Maryland and Virginia were not justified in their attack on the agreement because they could not show they had suffered or would suffer irreparable damage.

The Court of Appeals agreed that the producers failed to show they

Eden Threatens To Seize Rebels' Fighting Vessels

'Big Bertha' Gun's Inventor Is Dead

Baden, Austria, Feb. 7 (AP).—Oswald Dirmoser, university professor and engineer who constructed "Big Bertha" cannon of World War fame, died today. He was 63.

Big Bertha was the nickname of the German long-range gun, manufactured by the Krupp Iron Works, which in 1918 created a sensation by shelling Paris from the forest of Coucy, at a range of 76 miles.

The bombardment extended over 140 days and killed 256 persons. The gun fired a 264-pound shell. The gun's name was derived from Frau Bertha Von Bohlen, one of the principal proprietors of the Krupp Munitions Works.

Island of Majorca Already Blockaded

Franco Is Warned That Submerged Submarines Will Be Sunk.

The Foreign Situation.

British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden intimated the British navy is prepared to seize Spanish rebel ships or blockade the Balearic Islands unless "pirate" attacks on neutral shipping cease.

Eden's Threat.

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

London, Feb. 7.—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden intimated strongly in the House of Commons today that the British navy is prepared to seize Spanish rebel ships or blockade the Balearic Islands unless "pirate" attacks on neutral shipping cease immediately.

Naval sources revealed that a virtual naval blockade of the insurgent-held Island of Majorca already has been put into effect with British and French warships—part of a fleet of 70—cruising just outside Spanish territorial waters, alert for the departure of any "pirate" submarines.

Warning Sent Franco.

The foreign secretary, disclosing that wartime conditions prevail off the coasts of war-torn Spain, announced that a formidable fleet of British warships engaged in the new "antipiracy" patrol is under orders to sink on sight any submerged submarine along the crowded trade routes.

The orders to the British fleet apply only to the zone assigned to Great Britain in the patrol, but the French and Italian navies have subscribed to the "shoot-to-sink" policy.

Gen. Francisco Franco has been formally warned, Eden said, that Britain will "not tolerate" any submerged submarine in the British zone. A similar note was sent to the Spanish loyalist government.

May Try Retaliation.

The members of Commons cheered loudly when Eden, after announcing the shoot-to-sink orders, said:

"Should we be mistaken in our calculations that these measures will end piracy completely, his majesty's government will not exclude further action."

Britain has informed Franco, he added, that she will not continue to deal with such piratical attacks as the sinkings of the British steamers Alcira and Endymion by protests alone or demands for compensation.

"The government has reserved the right," he said, "without further notice to take such retaliatory action as might be required and appropriate to the particular case."

Italian Amity Seen.

London, Feb. 7 (AP).—New British measures against Mediterranean piracy—supported by both France and Italy—were disclosed to the House of Commons today amid growing indications of moves toward a new Anglo-Italian friendship.

Yale's Borchard Assails Foreign Policy Secrecy

With a vigorous appeal for democratic control over the foreign policy of the United States, Dr. Edwin Borchard, of Yale Law School, world-famous authority on international law, last night severely indicted current tendencies toward a "philosophy of coercion and intervention."

Prof. Borchard warned against a further adventure in "political philanthropy" similar to that of 1917-1918. "Hysteria and emotion prevent sound and sensible conclusions," he asserted, "yet it is in such times that decisions involving, perhaps, the permanent fate of a nation are expected to be made."

Delivering a Bronson Cutting Memorial lecture before a Constitution Hall audience of 3,000, including several members of both Houses of Congress, Borchard presented five specific proposals to check the "growth of secrecy in our foreign affairs."

1. Popular referendum before declaration of war "may prevent the making of an individual whim of some future president the national policy of the United States," Borchard said in defense of the proposed Ludlow amendment to the Constitution.

2. Cabinet members should "be heard on the floor of the House," he said, adding that "it should be their duty to respond to requests for explanation of governmental policy. At the present moment no explanation has been afforded as to why

Copeland Seeks Marine Inquiry On 'Subversion'

Ryan Says Reds Finance Bridges; N. Y. Senator Hints Deportation.

By Edward T. Folliard

Chairman Copeland, of the Senate Commerce Committee, announced yesterday he was drafting a resolution asking $25,000 for an investigation of "subversive activities" in the American merchant marine.

In its hearings on labor legislation for the shipping industry, the committee has been told that Communists occupy key positions in at least one of the big maritime unions.

"We are about to spend $150,000,000 for new American merchant ships," the New York Senator said. "These ships would become auxiliary vessels in the Navy in time of emergency. What is the use of spending the taxpayers' money unless we know that we are going to have a loyal personnel?"

Red Support Charged.

Other developments were:

Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's Association (A. F. L.), was summoned to testify before the committee tomorrow. In New York, Ryan charged that the Communist Party financed the speeches of Harry Bridges, Australian boss of the longshoremen on the West Coast and now a C. I. O. lieutenant.

"That's my main grievance against John L. Lewis—putting Bridges, a Communist, in charge of the West Coast for the C. I. O.," Ryan told the Associated Press. "We have Communists in the American Federation of Labor, too, but we keep them in their places."

Deportation Held Possible.

Chairman Copeland said that, judging from confidential data in the hands of the Government, there is sufficient legal grounds to deport Bridges. He said the committee had a "photostatic copy of what is alleged to be Bridges' membership in the Communist Party under the name of Harry Dorgan."

A transcript of testimony at an was made public yesterday, showed executive hearing Friday, which that Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins told the committee that membership in the Communist Party was not, per see, grounds for deportation.

"You see," she said, "the law reads as follows: A man can be deported for being an anarchist. That is stated in the law. He can be deported for believing in or advocating the overthrow of the Government by force or violence, or for belonging to an organization which advocates the overthrow of the Government by force or violence.

How the Law Works.

"It is under that clause that the Communists who have been deported have been deported."

Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, pursued the question, asking:

"They have not been deported merely because they belonged to the party; they have been deported because there was some collateral evidence that they themselves were subversive agents?"

Miss Perkins explained that many were cases wherein a man had been distributing literature advocating the overthrow of the Government. Some, she said, had been deported because a finding was made that the Communist Party did advocate the overthrow of the Government by force or violence.

Vandenberg asked Miss Perkins if she was aware that communistic elements were trying to create discord on American ships.

"It is very difficult to answer that question, sir," she said, "because we so lightly use the word communist—all of us do. We have a tendency to use it to describe people who are very militant and do not agree with us."

Senator Bennett Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, asked Miss Perkins whether she would deport a man, an avowed communist, who is now in Puerto Rico trying to tie up American ships.

Miss Perkins reminded him that this man was a native-born American.

Clark asked her to assume that the man were an alien and then asked her whether he would be deported. Miss Perkins said she would "have to look into the evidence."

Senator Vandenberg asked Miss Perkins to suppose that there were a number of unions and that three-fourths of their officers were avowed Communists.

Another Hypothesis.

"Would you consider that a hazardous contemplation?" Vandenberg asked.

"Well," Miss Perkins replied, "I would like to strike out the word 'hazardous' and say that I consider it disruptive of orderly union organization."

"From the standpoint of public welfare and national security?"

"It is very difficult to say; it is one of those extremely complicated situations. I think, hypothetically, that it is possible for a Communist to conduct a perfectly good trade union. As a matter-of-fact, we know from experience that some Communists in some unions have disrupted the union itself and brought about quarrels which created ill will both between employers and the workers and between groups of workers themselves.

Miss Perkins on Dangers.

"But that has not always been the case. I think in every particular case you have to draw your conclusions from what the facts show in that case."

Senator Vandenberg asked Miss Perkins to picture a union which no man could join unless he had a card showing that he was in good standing in the Communist Party.

"Would you think it was dangerous at all from the standpoint of the general welfare?" he asked.

Miss Perkins replied:

"I do not think I would think it was dangerous in the sense that a ship was likely to sink because the union had some officials who were Communists."

Miss Perkins said she was confident that not many American seamen were Communists. The committee members agree on that so far as the rank and file are concerned. But they are not so sure about the maritime union officials.

Politics and People

By Franklyn Waltman

Apparently the widely proclaimed White House rule against interfering in Democratic primary or local contests has been thrown out of the East Room window, at least so far as this eventful political year goes. Such a conclusion is inescapable in view of Democratic political developments of the last two weeks.

WALTMAN.

Mr. Roosevelt, instead of abstaining, as he avows he does, has involved himself up to the hips in the Democratic factional battles. Of course, such action by him is justified by his friends as a demonstration of altruism, a demonstration of his sense of loyalty and gratitude to those who have supported him. But such explanations are greeted with Bronx cheers in certain quarters.

There the President is held to be thinking very much of his own interests and far more about 1940 than 1938. The real test of Mr. Roosevelt's loyalty and political altruism will come when the seat under Senator William H. Dieterich, of Illinois, commences to become really hot.

Pursuing the technique developed when the President bestowed his blessings on Senate Democratic Leader ("Dear Alben") Barkley, the President on Saturday night placed the prestige of the White House behind the candidacy for re-election of Senator F. Ryan Duffy, of Wisconsin. As in the case of "Dear Alben," Senator Duffy's friends gave a testimonial dinner in his honor at Fond du Lac, Wis., on Saturday night. As Senator Joseph F. Guffey rallied to the Barkley dinner, the latter attended the Duffy dinner—and used the same theme as he did in the speech he delivered at his own—"The Challenge to Democracy."

And, as the President sent his "dear Mac" letter eulogizing the Kentuckian, so he sent a letter, this time through Leo T. Crowley, the native Wisconsinite who heads the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, eulogizing Senator Duffy. In the "dear Mac" letter to Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre, Mr. Roosevelt said, "I wish you would go down to Louisville and tell the home folks how much we in Washington think of their senior Senator."

In the "dear Leo" letter, the President said "you know what we think of Ryan and I want his home folks to know it, too."

A few hours after this spontaneous and colorful tribute to Senator Duffy, James Roosevelt, the White House crown prince, emerged from the Palm Beach surf in Florida to bestow blessings on the candidacy for re-election of Senator Claude Pepper, of that State, also facing Democratic opposition.

Solemnly and sonorously—and very amusingly, indeed—Crown Prince Roosevelt explained in a formal statement that "my personal policy and, I believe, the policy of the officials at Washington is to take no part in State campaigns." And then disregarding "my personal policy," the young man proceeded to give Senator Pepper a ringing indorsement for re-election.

Of course it is inconceivable that the Crown Prince would have made such a declaration without consultation with "papa." Indeed, there was no occasion revealed in the Palm Beach dispatches which required young Roosevelt, vacationing at Joseph P. Kennedy's Florida villa, to make any statement at all.

Democratic difficulties in several other States, notably Ohio, appear to be worrying Mr. Roosevelt. He invited Senator Vic Donahey to the White House yesterday for a little discussion of Ohio politics, as the latter explained his visit. What transpired was not revealed, but some New Dealers think Senator Donahey—not exactly an Administration enthusiast—should run for Governor this year to keep Ohio Democratic. Senator Donahey has shown no enthusiasm for that New Deal idea, either.

Mr. Roosevelt already has had Gov. Henry Horner, Mayor Edward J. Kelly and National Committeeman Patrick Nash at the White House to ascertain whether something cannot be done to still the turbulent Democratic waters in Illinois. Gov. Horner said that if that meant taking Senator Dietrich for another term the answer was "no." The Chicago Mayor and Committeeman Nash did not turn thumbs down, but they disavowed any enthusiasm for Senator Dietrich.

Now if there is a man in the Senate to whom the President should be grateful it is Senator Dieterich. Not only has he supported the New Deal in its every undertaking—excepting the utility holding company bill—but he withdrew, under Administration pressure, his pledge to vote for Senator Pat Harrison for Senate floor leader.

Whether Mr. Roosevelt will go down the line for Senator Dieterich remains to be seen. The one important difference between his situation and that of Senators Barkley, Pepper and Duffy is that Mr. Roosevelt loses nothing if Senator Dieterich is thrown overboard. The Kelly-Nash faction as well as the Horner faction in Illinois are supporters of the President. The Horner faction is determinedly opposed to Senator Dieterich and the Kelly-Nash faction have no enthusiasm for him—indeed, would be glad to be relieved of him.

Thus to stick by his supporter in Illinois, the President will be required to defy one faction friendly to him and to force another faction, also friendly to him, to take a candidate they do not particularly wish. It is an anomalous situation and one which will do Mr. Roosevelt no good if he interferes. Perhaps that is his reason for holding back an indorsement of Senator Dieterich, even though the latter faces the first primary fight this year.

No such impelling reasons exist for Presidential reluctance in regard to the Kentucky, Wisconsin and Florida contests. If Gov. A. B. ("Happy") Chandler in Kentucky defeats Senator Barkley, Mr. Roosevelt is smart enough to know the Kentucky delegation at the 1940 Democratic National convention will not be a Roosevelt delegation.

Nor will the Wisconsin Democratic organization feel friendly toward the President if Senator Duffy is succeeded by a La Follette Progressive. The President apparently feels it is sufficiently important to keep that State's Democratic organization friendly to justify his first challenge to the power of the La Follettes, also his friends and supporters. But the La Follettes will not control the Wisconsin delegation to the 1940 Democratic convention.

And certainly if Senator Pepper is defeated, those opposing him will not go to the 1940 convention shouting "we want Roosevelt" or ready to support his hand-picked candidate for the party nomination.

Thus Mr. Roosevelt actually is fighting today to assure his control over the 1940 Democratic National convention, either for a third term nomination or to be able to select his successor.

Security Tax Delay Is Sought By Vandenberg

Senate Asked to Limit Pay Roll Levies to 1% Pending 'Review.'

A series of amendments to the social security act limiting its tax features until "a time when there is adequate experience upon which to base a conclusive opinion," yesterday was introduced in the Senate by Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan.

Vandenberg proposed that pay roll taxes for old-age retirement benefits be held to 1 per cent each on employers and employes "until Congress reviews the whole subject." The present law would increase the tax every three years until it is 3 per cent each on employers and employes.

The Michigan Republican said the effect incidentally would be "to hold down the $47,000,000,000 full reserve to an amount merely sufficient to retire a large portion of the national debt."

Vandenberg, who last year caused a Senate Finance Committee study to be made of possible changes in the act, also proposed that pay roll taxes go automatically into the old-age reserve account, with a Federal guarantee for any deficit.

He said this "would partially cure the present indefensible practice of mingling these pay roll collections with general Treasury revenues that are spent for general purposes."

A third Vandenberg proposal would require that old-age pension reserves, in so far as possible, shall be used to retire existing Federal indebtedness, "rather than as an excuse and shield for new bonds and bigger debts." He proposed limiting the issuance of any new or special bonds to a five-year maturity.

Meanwhile, the Social Security Board announced unemployment benefit disbursements during the first week and a half of payments totaled $1,581,218 in 19 States. Payments, the board said, went to 160,747 individuals. In 8 of the 19 States, payments had been made only since January 31, because of special requirements.

U. S. Circuit Court Upholds SEC Right To Block 'Rigging'

Chicago, Feb. 7 (AP).—The Securities and Exchange Commission won today what it said was the first higher court test of its power to restrain stock manipulation by injunction.

The United States Circuit of Appeals affirmed an injunction recently issued by Federal Judge John P. Barnes against R. J. Koeppe & Co., an investment securities concern. The court held there was ample evidence the firm had been rigging the market with transactions which boosted stocks of the Paducah Cooperage Co. 200 per cent.

Answering a defense contention that the securities and exchange act restricted trading in securities, the court's presiding judge, Evan A. Evans, said in the opinion:

"There can be no justifiable regret that the act successfully prevents such practices, even though market activities are thereby somewhat curtailed."

Hazen Bill Seeks Flag to End D. C. 'Embarrassment'

Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of District Commissioners, yesterday submitted a bill to Congress to provide the District of Columbia with a flag.

The measure would set up a commission of three to pass on the design. The commission would comprise the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy and the president of the Board of Commissioners. The Fine Arts Commission would be authorized to pass on the flag's design before it is adopted.

Hazen in his letter pointed out that the States all have flags and that District officials frequently are embarrassed at not having a flag at parades and celebrations.

Woman Opposing Equal Rights Amendment Brings Smiles to Senate Committee.

Senate Judiciary Committee members smiled broadly yesterday when Miss Dorothy Straus, of New York City, representing the National League of Women Voters, told them "ladies are not at all anxious to be recreated, legislatively, into the image of man."

Miss Straus was opposing the constitutional amendment proposed by Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, to give women equal rights with men. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, sent a letter to the committee opposing the amendment and at her press conference yesterday Mrs. Roosevelt, although not mentioning the amendment, reaffirmed her belief that women in industry need protective legislation.

The committe will vote on the proposal on St. Valentine's Day.

An extension of its inquiry into the American Cotton Co-operative Association and the Government cotton pool was voted yesterday by the Senate Agriculture Committee. Col. Lawrence Westbrook, former Federal relief official will complete his investigation of claims that some 3,000,000 bales of cotton on which the Government made loans was underrated as to quality. The sum voted yesterday added $25,000 to a previous $10,000.

The statement that the boycott on wearing silk harmed this Nation more than Japan was interpolated by Senator Bilbo (Democrat), of Mississippi, in his anti-lynching bill filibuster yesterday. "The boycott works a hardship on a big investment in machinery and 75,000 to 100,000 workers here," he asserted.

A shower of Texas pink grapefruit deluged Capitol Hill yesterday from the office of Representative West (Democrat), of that State. When Representative Hendrick (Democrat), of Florida, recently distributed grapefruit from his district another Representative asked West if the Rio Grande citrus fruit could stand comparison. Senators and Representatives, reporters, secretaries, elevator boys and police will be able to answer that question today.

The $27,638,524 first deficiency appropriations bill was approved yesterday by a Senate Appropriations sub-committee and sent to the full committee for final approval. The bill, practically unchanged as it passed the House, included $16,700,000 for Federal land banks and $2,500,000 for the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to make up for reduction in interest rates on farm mortgages.

House Liberals Take Program To Roosevelt

Maverick and 30 Other Representatives Ask Wage-Hour Bill.

By the Associated Press.

More than 30 House liberals urged upon President Roosevelt yesterday a legislative program calling for a wage-hour bill, retention of the much-criticized undivided profits tax and a stronger capital gains tax.

Led to the White House by Representative Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, they asked, in addition, a "simple direct farm bill" assuring farm prices equaling the cost of production at least, and a permanent public works program capable of absorbing all the able-bodied unemployed.

"The President listened attentively," Maverick said, when he distributed copies of the group's proposals to newspapermen, "and then made a general comment."

"Was it sympathetic?" a reporter asked.

"He's always sympathetic to me," the heavy-voiced Texan replied.

While strongly urging the retention of the undistributed profits tax, the group suggested: Amendments to permit small corporations to "accumulate minimum reserves out of earnings free of tax," and to give stock dividends the status of distributed profits, and permit their deduction in computing the tax to be paid.

Other proposals included: increased estate and gift taxes; the removal of tax exemption privileges; a national land use program to include a Nation-wide soil conservation program; rapid expansion of the Social Security program to include all population groups not now covered; nationalization of the Federal Reserve banks; a system of secured loans for low-cost housing, small business, home owners and agriculture; the regularization of industrial employment and immediate provision of work for the unemployed on the Government works program.

Bilbo Again Asks Colored Migration To End Race Issue

By the Associated Press.

The Southern filibuster against the antilynching bill droned on in the Senate yesterday, Senator Bilbo (Democrat), Mississippi, speaking to an almost empty chamber.

The Mississippian again called for a voluntary migration of colored people to Africa as a solution of the race problem.

Bilbo, who announced last week he was prepared to speak for 30 days, was interrupted Friday when the Senate voted down a motion to law aside the anti-lynching measure in farov of an appropriation bill.

Democratic Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, said yesterday there had been no change in intentions to take up the conference report on the new farm bill as soon as the House has acted on it. He declined to say, however, whether he would move to lay aside the antilynching bill after the conference report is out of the way.

Roosevelt's Son Held Meddler In Pepper Fight

Representative Wilcox Condemns Mixing in Florida Primary.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Wilcox, a candidate in Florida's three-man Democratic Senatorial campaign, denounced yesterday as "unwarranted meddling" a statement by James Roosevelt issued Sunday at Palm Beach, Fla., urging the renomination of Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida.

Wilcox said it had been his "observation the people of Florida have heretofore been able to manage their own affairs without outside interference, and I suspect that in this instance they will not welcome this unwarranted meddling in a matter of such grave importance as the selection of a Senator."

"After all," Wilcox added, "the Senator to be chosen in May will represent the people of Florida and not the Washington politicians. I have the utmost confidence in their ability to select a Senator of their own choosing who will best represent their interests.

"We have not yet reached the point where our legislators are to be selected for us, as the young man will undoubtedly learn in May."

Churchmen to Talk On Race Relations

Race relations leaders in Washington and other Eastern communities will confer Saturday on "Christian Neighbors," in Calvary Baptist Church.

Dr. Ralph Harlow, of Smith College, Northampton, Mass., and Mrs. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, of Palmer Memorial Institute, Sedalia, N. C., will be principal speakers at the evening meeting.

In the morning discussions will be held on "Housing and Health," with Frank Thorne, administrator of Langston Housing Project, and James E. Ring, of the Alley Dwelling Authority, as leaders.

Fleming Praises New Housing Act

The new housing act yesterday was hailed as a powerful stimulus to construction of homes for low-income families in a speech by Robert V. Fleming, president of Riggs National Bank, at a luncheon meeting of the Washington Building Congress.

Washington may be approaching the saturation point in the more expensive type of residential construction, he said, but a low-cost housing program would maintain total construction activity here at its present level.

District banks are in a position to give full co-operation in the housing program, he said.

Labor Aide Rules For Ford Defense

St. Louis, Feb. 7 (AP).—Tilford E. Dudley, trial examiner in the National Labor Relations Board hearing on charges of unfair labor practices against the Ford Motor Co., announced today modification of his ruling limiting defense testimony.

Dudley said he would permit witnesses to testify concerning circumstances under which they joined either the United Automobile Workers of America, a C. I. O. union, or the Liberty Legion of America, Inc. The Liberty Legion is seeking recognition as employes' collective bargaining agency at the St. Louis assembly plant.

As a result of modification, company attorneys said they planned to call all of the 656 employes at the plant.

Bank Suit Filed By Col. Cooper For $2,000,000

Aims to Obtain Accounting of Commercial's Funds Paid by Receiver.

Seeking to obtain an accounting of funds paid out by the receiver of the defunct Commercial National Bank to various quasi-governmental bureaus Col. Wade H. Cooper, erstwhile president of the bank, and at one time president of three local banks, yesterday asked District Court to require the officials to pay an estimated $2,000,000.

Those cited in the suit were J. F. T. O'Connor, former comptroller of the currency; F. G. Awalt, former deputy comptroller; Robert C. Baldwin, former receiver of the bank, and George P. Barse general counsel for the comptroller's office. The suit named them as officials of the Government and as private citizens.

The petition explains that when the Commercial was closed it had deposits of $182,000 from the Inland Waterways Corporation; $429,000 from the United States Shipping Board, Merchant Fleet Corporation; Government of the Canal Zone, $711,000; treasurer of the Philippine Islands, $1,003,000, and the Alien Property Custodian $162,000.

All the accounts were covered by the deposit of securities so that when the bank closed, the depositors were able to obtain payments in full, while other depositors obtained only fractional payments. After the United States Supreme Court had ruled that national banks could not lawfully guarantee accounts, attempts were started to recoup the excess amounts paid the depositors. Several cases have been won in District Court and are now awaiting an appeal in higher courts. Only the Philippine Islands fund remains to be fought out in the lower court.

Sale of the securities to pay the amounts in full resulted in a million dollar loss to the bank, George B. Fraser, attorney for Col. Cooper claimed, while the excess payments reached a like figure. Col. Cooper's contention is that the sale of the bonds was unlawful and at low prices and that the "favored depositors "should be required to return all payments above the prorata share of other claimants, or that those responsible for the alleged excessive payments, should be held personally liable.

Scout Who Posed Girls Nude Escapes Inquiry

Ice-Choked River Floods Michigan Village

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Ice clogged the mouth of the Clinto River at Mount Clemens, Mich., and the stream, swollen by melting ice and snow, backed up over neighboring doorsteps and fields. Roads on each bank of the river were covered. Damage in Michigan was widespread as streams swollen by unseasonal thaws left their banks.

Roth Holds Plans Of Little Business Largely 'Screwy'

Cleveland, Feb. 7 (AP).—Fred Roth, chairman of the small businessmen's conference at Washington, said today many plans proposed were "screwy."

Roth, president of the Whitney-Roth Shoe Co. here, came home to recuperate from sleepless nights and sparring with conferees.

"They were sincere," he said. . . . "Notwithstanding, a good many of the plans were just plain screwy."

There is talk of establishing a permanent advisory board of small businessmen, Roth said. The Department of Commerce has asked him to confer on a plan for such a board.

Nickname No Slur, VanDevanterHolds

New York, Feb. 7 (AP).—Take it from retired Supreme Court Justice Willis Van Devanter, a nickname is nothing that should hurt your feelings.

The white-haired jurist was sitting as a Federal judge in the mail fraud trial of James C. McKay and William J. Graham and three others today when the prosecution dwelt on the fact that one of their acquaintances was known as "Scarface" Sullivan.

Reply Undecided On Navy, Tokyo's Parliament Told

Tokyo, Feb. 7 (AP).—The foreign minister and the navy minister declared today that no decision had been reached on answers to formal queries from the United States, France and Great Britain about Japan's naval building program.

Both Foreign Minister Koki Hirota and Admiral Mistumasa Yonai, navy minister, told questioners in Parliament the question still was being considered.

Domei (Japanese news agency) said earlier, however, that Japanese navy officials had decided against disclosing details of their program.

U.S. Caused Slump, Johnson Declares

Newark, N. J., Feb. 7 (AP).—The current business slump was described by Gen. Hugh Johnson today as a "federally cause d depression, so clearly the effect of political policies that there is no obscurity at all about the cause and effect."

Speaking over a coast-to-coast radio network (Mutual) at the opening of a department store's observance of industrial week, Johnson said: "The Government has taken into its own hands so many arbitrary economic controls that the future is almost at the mercy of the whims and fancies of a single man—and he is a fanciful man."

MotormanHeld After His Tram KillsPedestrian

Jury Finds 14th Street Accident Due to Negligence.

A street car motorman was held under the negligent homicide act yesterday after an inquest in the traffic death of Leonard DiGiovanni, 50, 1361 Newton street northwest.

Marshall Scott, 43, 1311 Longfellow street northwest, motorman, was held responsible for DiGiovanni's death after witnesses testified Scott's northbound car struck the man while he was crossing Fourteenth street from east to west at Newton Saturday night.

DiGiovanni, according to testimony, was struck in the crosswalk and knocked west of the southbound tracks.

Scott said yesterday DiGiovanni's body was lying directly in front of the car when he stopped.

DiGiovanni appeared bewildered by northbound and southbound automobiles, Scott testified. Other witnesses were unable to recall any north and south traffic in motion at the time of the accident.

A second verdict by the jury held that James Palmer, colored, 53, 905 French street northwest, was killed by an automobile, the driver of which is unknown.

A coroner's jury today will investigate the death Sunday of 14-year-old Kenneth L. Fenton, 14, 232 Channing street northeast, who was instantly killed when he was knocked off his bicycle.

Mrs. Florence Sindell, 46, 5465 Nebraska avenue northwest, driver of the car that struck the boy at Broad Branch road and Brandywine street northwest, will appear at the hearing.

Kenneth's death was the thirteenth traffic fatality this year.

'Dixie' Davis Refused Cut in $300,000 Bail

C. I. O. Expects New Pact After U. S. Steel Talk

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 7.—In a closely guarded but apparently fruitful conference the C. I. O. asked the U. S. Steel Corporation today to renew contracts for more than 500,000 men.

At the end of some 2 hours of talk, everybody concerned was silent for the record, but authoritative union sources plainly indicated privately a feeling of satisfaction that C. I. O. would be granted a new contract to replace the one expiring February 28.

One high union official predicted a "quick cleanup."

Another, asked whether the conferences might have to be concluded in Pittsburgh, headquarters of the C. I. O.'s steel section, replied:

"It appears they will be wound up here."

Also supporting the privately expressed union view that U. S. Steel would again sign was the fact that C. I. O. Head John L. Lewis was not among the conferees.

Nearly a month ago, on January 12, Lewis had a significant talk here with Thomas L. Moses, a steel vice president and the man largely responsible for bringing "big steel" and Lewis together in their first agreement.

Also recalled was the conference Lewis and Myron Taylor, chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, had in Taylor's home several weeks ago. These Lewis talks have been regarded widely as having prepared the way for an amicable conclusion of the current discussions.

Various reports circulated while the conferees sat today, one widely credited being that tentative agreements had been reached not to lower the present wage scale. The parleys are scheduled to resume tomorrow.

The Bureau of Air Commerce will co-operate with the Army in an investigation of the death of Charles L. Richardson, 56, Labor Department conciliator, who was killed Sunday after "bailing out" of an Army airplane near Warrenton, Ga.

The investigation will attempt to ascertain whether Richardson, who lived at 1832 Biltmore street northwest, was unable to find the rip cord of his parachute or whether the parachute failed to open after the rip cord had been pulled.

1,059 Milkmen Of Capital Area Banquet Here

Farmers From Two States Drink Own Product at Willard.

Banquet tables of the Willard Hotel ballroom were laden with 1,059 half-pint bottles of milk yesterday. A corresponding number of chairs were occupied by milk producers who had come from as far South as Orange, Va., and as far North as the Pennsylvania line to drink their own milk.

The occasion was the annual banquet of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, Inc. Always a big event in milk circles, this was the biggest yet. Not only was there a record attendance but there was record milk production to boast about.

"It's been the largest year since 1933," according to B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the association. "We marketed 25,000,000 gallons and made more money than we ever have."

The unexpected number of guests probably drained the hotel kitchen dry of its milk supply. At any rate, it taxed the waiters' ingenuity. Covers had been laid in the ballroom for 900 and, by the time everyone was seated, auxiliary tables had been set up everywhere but in elevators and telephone booths.

Hazen Gives Address.

District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen shared the milk—and the banquet—and gave the official address of welcome. He assured the producers that the District Health Department was at their disposal in every move to raise milk standards in the Washington market.

Dr. Daniel Seckinger, assistant health officer, congratulated the producers on the fact that 80 per cent of the raw milk brought into the local market contained less than 10,000 bacteria, the standard for certified milk.

Directors Elected.

Two hundred members attended the association's annual meeting yesterday morning at the Silver Spring Armory. President Frank S. Walker, of Orange, Va., presided. Derrick, in his annual report, said that all Washington dairies but one were buying through the association.

Maryland producers elected to the board of directors include E. C. Biser, of Adamstown; Ronald E. Kling, of Ijamsville; M. H. Ransburg, of Lewiston; J. H. Remsburg, of Middletown; E. C. Speaks, of Frederick; B. F. Waters, of Germantown; B. B. Diamond, of Gaithersburg; S. M. White, of Dickerson, and L. R. Sabine, of Gaithersburg.

Virginia directors are A. Gordon Willis, of Culpeper; J. L. Bristow, of Fairfax; A. Corneilius, of Alexandria; H. F. Harrison, of Herndon; A. L. A. Covington, of Warrenton; J. E. Spitzer, of Midland; H. T. Pancoast, of Purcellville; C. B. Harding, of Ashburn; Frank S. Walters, of Orange, and E. H. Marsteller, of Manassas.

I. D. Van Metre, of Martinsburg, W. Va., was chosen director at large and J. W. Kimman, of McHenry, Md., and M. E. Remsburg, of Sharpsburg, Md., were appointed representatives.

would suffer from the agreement, and returned the cases to the District Court with instructions that they be dismissed.

Shortly after the District Court issued its temporary restraining order Secretary Wallace issued an order suspending for the time being any attempt on the part of the AAA to enforce the price-fixing agreement. The suspension still stood last night as officials contemplated their next step in regulating milk prices here.

Va. House Hearing Set.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 7 (AP).—The House Committee on Agriculture and Mining today set a special hearing for 3:30 p. m. Monday for the Medley milk bill eliminating the milk commission's power to fix the retail price of milk in State-controlled markets.

The milk bill, introduced by Delegates W. D. Medley, of Arlington; Maurice Rosenberg, of Alexandria; Frank Moncure, of Stafford; Francis Pickens Miller, of Fairfax; Elamater Davis, of Norfolk; John B. Boatwright, of Buckingham, and L. H. Shrader, of Amherst, would add a new section to the present law specifically denying the commission power to regulate prices except those involving transactions between producer-distributors and distributors.

Terms of 4 Who Beat Colored Man Upheld

New Orleans, Feb. 7 (AP).—The Louisiana Supreme Court upheld today 15-year sentences imposed on four white men for beating a colored man unconscious and placing him in the path of a railroad train.

The men, Piney Wall, Herbert Lea, Julius Foster and Dewey Wilson, were convicted of kidnaping the man, Jeff Davis, tying him to a tree and beating him unconscious because he owed Wall some money. Passersby rescued Davis.

Birth of Child Halts Pension of Hero's Widow

Two and a half years ago a colored relief worker was drowned in a futile attempt to save the lives of two white children.

Thousands of admiring and sympathetii Washingtonians contributed funds to give the hero, Sterling Calhoun, a decent burial. The Carnegie Hero Foundation awarded his widow a posthumous Carnegie hero award with a monthly pension of $50 for her and the two children.

Yesterday it was revealed that the Carnegie Hero Foundation of Pittsburgh had withdrawn the pension because the widow had given birth to an illegitimate child.

"It is against our policy to continue allowances of widows who do not remain respectable, well behaved members of the community," a letter from C. B. Ebersol, manager of the foundation, stated.

Mrs. Calhoun received the letter December 21, but did not make the cancellation public. A small amount of the fund raised by citizens still remains in the hands of a committee of the Southwest Civic Association, and she has lived on this and money received from part-time housework.

"I only have a part-time job that wil end in a few weeks," she said last night.

200 Central Union Delegates Propose a Unit to Enforce Laws.

Establishment of a Labor Department as a permanent agency of the District Government was urged in a motion adopted last night by 200 delegates to the Washington Central Labor Union, meeting in the Typographical Temple, 423 G street northwest.

The department, as projected in the motion, would maintain a corps of inspectors and enforce legislation on wages, hourse and working conditions.

Opposition to any transfer of funds from the playgrounds department to the community centers was expressed in another motion.

Although reiterating their belief that Tom Mooney and Warren Billings should be freed, delegates rejected a resolution calling for a mass meeting in behalf of the famous California "Preparedness Day" prisoners, to be sponsored by the Central Labor Union.

Communists and other left-wing elements would attempt to dominate such a demonstration, speakers said.

Reporting activities of the Union Label League, H. F. Cudmore, secretary, declared, "A boycott on Japanese silk is not nearly so important as refusal to use products which do not bear the union label."

Sign Language.

Johnny Davis is painstakingly learning the Indian sign language from Artie Ortego, full-blooded California Mission Indian, for a funny and important scene in "Cowboy From Brooklyn."

The Indian sign language is universal and must be used correctly to avoid a flood of protesting letters from Indians and experts on the language.

Mother-in-Law Casts Doubt on Wright's Story

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Feb. 7.—Mrs. J. E. McBride, of Detroit, Mich., gave testimony today at variance with several angles of defense evidence in the trial of Paul Wright, accused of murdering Mrs. Evelyn McBride Wright—her daughter and his wife—and John Kimmel, his friend.

Mrs. McBride, a prosecution rebuttal witness, said Wright told her in Detroit in 1934 he had undergone a sterilization operation. She said he, in the course of the conversation, told her:

"I don't want any more family—Helen (the Wrights' baby daughter) is enough to take care of."

Wright Contradicted.

Wright has testified he underwent the operation to avert danger of further childbirth to Mrs. Wright, then afflicted with serious kidney trouble.

Mrs. McBride said her daughter had no miscarriage on a visit home in March, 1933, as Wright testified.

In 1935, Wright telephoned from Chicago saying he thought Mrs. Wright had been going out with someone else, but that he learned of only one telephone call as evidence of it, Mrs. McBride testified.

She still was under direct examination when court recessed until 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Juror Is Excused.

A man juror was excused from duty today because he complained he was nervously upset, had gastro-intestinal trouble and had developed "deep sympathy" for the defendant.

Superior Judge Ingall Bull discharged the juror, elderly William H. Foster, and an alternate juror, Mrs. Mary Smith, was chosen to sit for him.

The defense rested today, and the State introduced rebuttal witnesses in an effort to clinch its contention that Wright, former airport manager, shot his wife and Kimmel to death deliberately and consciously.

Farm

No. 2 on the special session agenda, was returned to committee, where it has remained ever since. The majority leadership last night was leaving no stone unturned to prevent a repetition of that reversal on the farm report, No. 1 on the President's program.

No accurate gauge of voting strength was available, but Representative Pat Boland, of Pennsylvania, majority whip, has called a meeting of his whip organization this morning for a last-minute report on the line-up.

Boland made no forecasts but Majority Leader Rayburn said the report would be approved by "a good majority."

Bolleau Leads Fight.

But Representative Gerald J. Boileau (Progressive), of Wisconsin, declared dairy bloc members, dissatisfied with conference changes in the Boileau-McNary amendment, would fight to recommit the bill. Boileau flatly predicted the conference report will be voted down.

Friends of the bill frankly were disturbed lest the strength of dairy bloc members be combined with the votes of outright Republican and Democratic opponents, and the ballots of some Laborites, to give a possible majority for recommital.

The farm bill, chief reason for summoning the special session, had been in conference since late December. Full conference agreement was reached last Friday on a compromise between widely divergent House and Senate drafts. The bill would control production and marketing of wheat, cotton, corn, tobacco and rice through a system of benefit payments, loans on stored crops and penalties on excess marketing in periods of surplus. Plans call for completing House action today and calling it up in the Senate tomorrow.

One center of controversy is the so-called dairy amendment, which originally prohibited benefits to farmers who used diverted land to pasture cattle and other livestock for market. Designed to restrict new dairy competition, Southern members declared it was aimed at the South.

Conferees narrowed the amendment to apply only to dairy cattle when stock in a given county was substantially increased. Dairy bloc leaders said the change was unacceptable.

Another provision of the report reputedly is opposed by the Agriculture Department. It would allow farmers who already have borrowed up to 9 cents a pound on 1937 cotton from the Commodity Credit Corporation to receive 2 cents a pound additional and to turn title to the cotton over to the Government. Payment would be made as soon as compliance was shown or a cotton marketing quota put into effect. Department officials feared 5,000,000 bales might thus be left on the hands of the Government.

Martin Hits "Gag Rule."

Republican opposition to "hasty consideration" of the farm bill followed a request by Chairman Marvin Jones, of the Agriculture Committee, and Chairman John O'Connor, of the Rules Committee, for permission to file committee reports before midnight. Minority Leader Snell objected. Both Jones and O'Connor later rushed reports to the House before adjournment so the bill could come up today.

Before the Rules Committee, Jones originally asked for only three hours of debate on the conference report. He pointed out the planting season already is under way in the extreme South and early passage was necessary if the program is to become effective this year.

Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, assistant minority leader, called it a "gag rule."

"It took you fellows one month to agree on the report and now you expect us to consider it in 3 hours," said Martin.

Representative E. E. Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, declared two days of debate should be allowed and Representative Lawrence Lewis (Democrat), of Colorado, pointed to the "complicated" nature of the measure and asked for "ample time." Representative Donald H. McLean (Republican), of New Jersey, said the proposed waiver of all points of order was "in violation of all of the time-honored rules of the House." Representative Stephen Pace (Democrat), of Georgia, appealing for more adequate debate, said he had studied the report for 60 hours without "finding out how it works."

Jones replied that two days would be taken up merely in discussing ponits of order if the rule were "opened up." He said the report by and large favored the measure which originally passed the House and extensive debate therefore was unnecessary. Asked by O'Connor if the bill was designed to increase prices, Jones said it was intended to "stabilize prices."

"It is not primarily a price bill," said Jones. "The only purpose of the measure is to have a practical relationship between agriculture and industry."

On the floor of the House, Boileau said conferees had "crucified" the dairy amendment and called the report "a betrayal of the Senate and the House."

Firestone Dies; Tire Magnate Passes in Sleep

End Comes Unexpectedly at Age 69 From Blood Clot Near His Heart.

By the Associated Press.

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 7.—Harvey S. Firestone, a farm boy who built one of the largest rubber businesses in the world, died of a blood clot near his heart as he slept early today.

The 69-year-old industrialist met a peaceful end in the great mansion of Harbel Villa, an ocean-front estate he acquired in 1924.

Of his large family, only a son, Russell A. Firestone, was reported to have been on hand at the time. Mrs. Firestone and their four other sons were believed to be in the North and a daughter, Elizabeth, at Smith College, where she is a senior.

The funeral will be held in Akron Friday.

Death Unexpected.

Firestone's death was unexpected. He attended services at the Miami Beach Community Church Sunday, as was his custom, and went for an automobile ride in the afternoon with a niece, Mrs. M. E. Ake.

After dinner he complained of indigestion. A local physician was called, but the complaint apparently was not considered serious.

Born on a farm near Columbiana, Ohio, in 1868, Firestone as a boy expressed a desire for a commercial career. After graduating from high school and business college he obtained his first position as bookkeeper in a Columbus coal firm.

After serving the company as salesman and sales manager, he interested himself in rubber tires. He went into the rubber business for himself in Chicago with an initial investment of less than $15,000. As the automobile industry expanded, Firestone's business flourished. He sold out a few years later for $1,254,000.

Moving to Akron, Firestone bought a renovated machine shop and launched the company he developed into one of the country's largest industrial concerns.

With the tremendous expansion of the tire business occasioned by the rapid development of the automobile, Firestone realized the necessity of a constant supply of raw materials for tire making. He acquired for his company cotton mills in Massachusetts and established buying centers for raw rubber in Malay. Next he acquired land in Liberia where he etablished his own rubber plantations.

Fought British Monopoly.

The last-named move was an important factor in the campaign which Firestone inaugurated against Great Britain's rubber monopoly. Control of crude rubber by that government became nearly absolute when in 1921 Parliament passed a law restricting the annual output. Other efforts of the Firestone campaign included the investigation of growing rubber in the Philippine Islands and in South American countries, while aid was given to his activities against the monopoly by the formation of a rubber buyers' pool in New York, in which he was interested, and by increased rubber production in the Dutch colonies.

When the United States entered the World War, Firestone was named a member of the Ohio Council of National Defense and was instrumental in organizing the rubber division of the war industries board. As president of the Rubber Association of America from 1916 to 1918, he interested himself in organizing the association's activities into war wark.

In the expansion of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., a subsidiary company of the same name was organized in Canada with Firestone as president, and another in England, of which he was a director. He also was president of the Firestone Steel Products Co.

Employes Benefited.

Appreciating the loyalty of his employes as one of the most important factors in his success, Mr. Firestone instituted for their benefit what was regarded as a model savings bank. Through its operation many of the workers were enabled to become stockholders in the company. He also built for them a home community, clubhouse, athletic field and golf course, and was organizer of the Firestone Park Trust & Savings Bank.

He retired as president of the Firestone company in 1932 and was succeeded by John W. Thomas, the firm's first chemist. Firestone became chairman of the board.

The death of Mr. Firestone left Henry Ford as the only surviving member of a famous quartet of nature lovers who took their vacations together for years. The others were John Burroughs, the naturalist, who died in 1921, and Thomas A. Edison, who died 10 years later.

Body to Be Sent Home.

He and Mrs. Firestone, the former Idabella Smith, of Jackson, Mich., were married in 1895. The sons, in addition to Russell, are Harvey, jr., Raymond, Roger and Leonard.

Two of the sons, Raymond and Roger, left Akron for Miami Beach, while Leonard and Harvey, jr., remained to arrange the funeral.

His body will be taken to Akron Thursday morning. It will lie in state at the Firestone home, Harbel Manor, until funeral services Friday at 10 a. m.

The Rev. Walter F. Tunks, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, will officiate at the services. Burial will be in the village cemetery at Columbiana, Ohio.

Common Sense About Constipation

If you knew that your constipation was caused by something left out of your food, wouldn't it be just common sense to put that something back?

Your trouble may be caused by nothing more than this. For the most common kind of constipation is due to lack of "bulk" in the bowels—you need some food that passes on through the stomach without being digested. Kellogg's All-Bran supplies this. It gives the bowels the bulky mass they need to work properly. And All-Bran also gives them the intestinal-tonic, vitamin B_1, which helps restore their tone.

Eat All-Bran as a cereal or baked in muffins. But however you eat it, be sure you get some every day. And drink plenty of water. All-Bran is made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

When Will Mother Come Home?

Six-year-old Catherine Lorraine Miller keeps vigil at the window, waiting for her mother, Mrs. Catherine Miller, who has been missing since Saturday. For the last two weeks mother and daughter have made their home with Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Jennes at 522 Sixth street northeast. Mrs. Jennes offered her home to Mrs. Miller, whom she met through a friend, "because she didn't have anywhere to go." Now Jennes, out of work, is wondering how he is to support the daughter of the woman his wife befriended.

Roosevelt Calls In Deadlocked Tax Bill's Foes

Tax

Kentucky, carrying the penalty proviso.

Ways and Means Committee Democrats met again yesterday to discuss general provisions of the report proposing modification of the undivided profits tax and "easing" of the tax on capital gains.

The proposed penalty on closely held corporations again was touched on briefly. Another meeting of committee Democrats was called for today, with the possibility of a vote on the proviso.

Joining the opposition forces, Representative John D. Dingell (Democrat), of Michigan, said yesterday: "I'll tell the cock-eyed world, I'm against it."

Dingell listed a number of old-line business firms in Detroit which would be subject to the penalty if they earned over $50,000 and paid out less than 60 per cent in dividends. Dingell said it was unfair they should be penalized, when corporations not closely held, but doing the same business, were exempted.

Theory Is Disputed.

Some of the opponents protest that the proviso introduces a new principle in revenue legislation by actually taxing "retention" of earnings, rather than the income itself. The old undivided profits tax was imposed on income, with the withheld earnings used as a guide.

Although Fuller, who was called to the White House yesterday, has fought the proposed penalty, it is understood he has pointed out that few, if any, business firms in Arkansas would be affected, as most closely held corporations in that State earn less than $50,000.

Permanent Credit Unit Sought in Wagner Bill

By the Associated Press.

Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, introduced a bill today for the permanent capitalization of the Commodity Credit Corporation, Government lending agency, at $100,000,000, the present figure. The bill was in line with a recommendation in the budget.

The bill also calls for transfer of all the capital stock of the corporation to "the United States" and directs administration of the agency by the President.

TAKE WEIGHT OFF TIRED FEET

Lose Fat The Easy Way—Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Bending and Rolling Exercises.

If your feet and ankles feel tired and ache all over—because you are carrying too much fat—do something about it. Try the treatment that has helped millions to reduce excess weight.

There's a reason why so many people find dieting slow and often times futile in reducing. The reason, doctors say, is often because a little gland is not working right.

All the blood in your body goes through this tiny gland sixteen times every day. If it doesn't pour into the blood stream about one and one-half drops of vital fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat. This fluid helps Nature to "burn up" excess food and fatty tissue in much the same way as a good "draft" acts in a furnace.

Now, physicians combat this condition by feeding this gland the substance it lacks—and millions of pounds of excess fat has been wiped out in this way.

Marmola Prescription Tablets contain the same element prescribed by most doctors in treating their fat patients. So don't waste your time or money striving to reduce with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Start the Marmola treatment today that millions have used to get rid of excess fat. The formula is in every box so you know just what you are taking. Don't wait—get a box of Marmola today from your druggist.

Vanishing Mother Leaves Child With Impoverished Host

A slender 6-year-old child, Catherine Lorraine Miller, yesterday looked from the window of a house at 522 Sixth street northeast, for her mother, Mrs. Catherine Miller, who disappeared Saturday morning. From the same window, Stanley Jennes looked out on a world that would offer him no work, and he wondered on the circumstance that brought him to befriend Mrs. Miller and how, now, he was to support the child who was left in his home.

Yesterday, Jennes, disturbed by Mrs. Miller's absence, reported the case to police. His wife, Mrs. Mary Jennes, a motherly-looking woman whose eyes grow damp over the matter, explained it this way:

She met Mrs. Miller "at the home of a friend" and told her she might come to live in the Jennes home "because she didn't have anywhere to go." That was about two weeks ago. Mrs. Miller then moved in with the 6-year-old child. She had no possessions other than a few articles wrapped in a paper bundle.

Then, on Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, she left and has not been heard of since, Mrs. Jennes said. She understood that her husband now is dead.

She described Catherine Miller as a woman with blonde hair, blue eyes, as weighting about 155 pounds and 23 years of age. The child is now in need of vaccination and badly in need of clothing, Mrs. Jenn said.

Palmisano Urges Underpass From Station to Capitol

Chairman Palmisano of the House District Committee, who daily rides by train between Washington and Baltimore, yesterday took steps to provide an underpass between the Capitol plaza and the station.

Calling back the District motor vehicle inspection bill, Palmisano induced the House to amend it so that receipts from the fee will go into the highway fund instead of general revenues.

The Commissioners, he said, should be given blanket authority to spend $1,000,000 or so on underpasses where they saw fit.

"I personally think that an underpass at Union Station for pedestrians would be better than either of the underpasses at Dupont or Thomas Circle," he said.

King Offers Bill To End Neutral Act as 'Failure'

Defense

the President's foreign policy in testimony before the House Naval Affairs Committee.

King, in explaining his demand for repeal of the present neutrality act, said:

"I do not wish to be dogmatic about this very difficult problem. But it is generally admitted now that the present law is entirely unsatisfactory, and operates in favor of aggressor nations and to the disadvantage of the smaller, weaker nations.

Johnson Asks Three Questions.

"I said at the time of its passage that the law would aid Japan in the Pacific. This may be a delicate time to reopen the question, but we may as well face facts and reconsider our neutrality policy in the light of experience."

Johnson stipulated that his resolution be carried out, "if it be not incompatible with the public interest." He asked three questions for Secretary Hull to answer:

"Whether or not any alliance, agreement or understanding exists or is contemplated with Great Britain relating to war or the possibility of war;

"Whether or not there is any understanding or agreement, express or implied, for the use of the Navy of the United States in conjunction with any other nation."

"Whether or not there is any understanding or agreement, express or implied, with any nation, that the United States Navy, or any portion of it, should police or patrol or be transferred to any particular waters or any particular ocean."

"People Entitled to Know."

Johnson said:

"The people of the United States are entitled to know if there are any alliances. A gentlemen's agreement brought Great Britain into the World War. Not one in 100 members of the House of Commons knew of that agreement.

"If Secretary Hull says that a reply in compliance with my resolution is incompatible with the public interest, that will satisfy me as to whether this country has any such alliances. If there are none, it will not do any harm to say so."

Admiral Leahy, who refused last week to disclose publicly the nature of discussions by Capt. Robert Ingersoll, head of the Navy war plans division, with British Admiralty officers, had caused much speculation by his action. Declaring he wished to clear up any resulting "misunderstanding," he said yesterday:

"The Navy does not have in mind any particular possible enemy, but does consider all foreign navies in its study of the sea defense needed by the United States.

"The Navy has no thought of obtaining assistance from any other nation.

"Defense Without Alliances."

"It has no thought of giving assistance in the solution of the problems of any other nation.

"It has no foreign commitments.

"There are no understandings regarding assistance to be given or received.

"There has been no talk of giving or receiving assistance.

"The Navy expects to solve naval defense problems that may confront the United States in the Navy's traditional way without alliances.

"It expects to stand on its own feet in providing protection to the United States and it expects to succeed."

The Hill measure which will follow the farm bill report to the House floor is a sweeping measure in the grant of Congressional powers to the President in wartime. He could fix and maintain maximum and minimum prices for all commodities; establish quotas for the sale of commodities and draft into the civilian Government service any person managing an industrial establishment.

Do Voters Favor Government Spending to Speed Business Recovery?

GALLUP POLL IN WEDNESDAY'S POST TELLS NATION'S SENTIMENT

Many people assert that Government pump priming leads to an artificial prosperity. Others feel that if business does not continue spending, the Federal Government will have to.

Does America think that Government spending should be increased to help get business out of its present slump? The Gallup Poll made a Nation-wide survey on this controversy. See the results of this poll tomorrow—in the Executive thinks there is not a state of war in China."

Yale's Borchard Assails Foreign Policy Secrecy

Policy

3. Asking limitation of the use of Executive agreements. Borchard proposed "that no important engagement be contracted by this Government without the concurrence of the Senate in the form of a treaty," or at least without concurrence of "a representative body of the Congress" in the propriety of concluding such an agreement without treaty.

Would Publish Documents.

4. Borchard asked revival of the former custom of promptly publishing State Department documents dealing with foreign affairs "for the purpose of keeping Congress currently informed of the problems involved in our relations with foreign countries."

5. Asserting that "the President may write ultimata to foreign governments and disclose the fact to Congress and the country only when he requests a declaration of war," Borchard suggested that the Secretary of State inform committees of one or both Houses of Congress as to the policies he is pursuing, "before important notes are sent or commitments made."

Taking a stand directly opposite that of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, the Yale professor asked, in support of the Ludlow resolution, "Why cannot the opinion of the people be asked on a matter of life and death to themselves and their country?"

Sees No Danger to Defense.

With the explanation that the proposed referendum would apply only to wars involving no danger of invasion of this continent, Borchard pointed out that "when we fight defensive wars 3,000 or 6,000 miles from home, the defensive power of the Nation would not be crippled by the short interval necessary to take a popular vote, and if it is thought that the people would probably vote against a war to be fought on foreign soil, that may exert a healthy restraint on executive ebulliency.

"In view of what war now means to every human being, the people should have an opportunity to assume full responsibility for so vital a decision."

In the question period following his address, Borchard said he thought it would be "harder to get the American people to vote away their safety than to persuade Congress to do so. The smaller the body, the easier is the penetration of propaganda."

Prof. Borchard warned that "judging by the atmosphere which today prevails in Washington, one may readily conclude that the theory of coercing other powers in the interests of a supposed morality is in the ascendancy."

Insisting that the traditional eighteenth century American policy of non-intervention was "founded on common sense" and "rooted in tolerance," the speaker said that "nothing has happened to alter in any way the justification for the policy."

"If the United States becomes involved in European or Asiatic wars, the chances are strong that it will have talked itself into those wars, that it will have sought and found an ostensibly high moral ground for intervention, and not because intervention is necessary, natural or profitable," Borchard declared.

Denounces Jargon.

The "jargon of collective security" he denounced as making "a frontal attack on American neutrality." Borchard scoffed at the idea that "it is easy instantly to pick an aggressor without adequate evidence, without adequate knowledge of the historical, social, psychological factors which create mass movements. Historians differ on such matters generations after any particular conflict, when all the evidence becomes available."

Drawing on the history of American relations with France, China and Mexico, Borchard showed that the United States is not entirely guiltless in treaty-breaking. "A peace treaty imposed under duress," he said, "has no special sanctity . . . A treaty such as the Nine-Power Treaty, based on a condition contrary to fact, the assumed territorial and administrative integrity of China, is too vague and uncertain and too political to stand upon firmly."

"Debunks" Kellogg Pact.

"Debunking" the Kellogg Pact, Borchard declared that "the European interest in its formulation was the desire to persuade the United States under another name to perform the supposed obligations of the League Covenant."

"For our more romantic circles," he dryly observed, "it was an escape from reality for which one may have all possible sympathy but no great intellectual respect."

"However depressing the manifestations in the totalitarian States, American participation in any ideological alliance would be fatal," Borchard said. "A supposed political division between dictatorships and democracies is, I believe, false. Here again, as in 1917, we find Russia helping the cause of democracy, which only a few years ago Italy and Japan were fervently engaged, so the prospectus said, in promoting.

"That the so-called democracies also happen to be the great imperialist powers, the great military and naval powers, and the financially strongest powers, is sometimes overlooked."

Borchard declared that the American policy of non-recognition of governments which had gained power through violence "was doubtless dictated by benevolence, but it should have been learned long ago that foreign countries cannot be preached to and that the international system of independent states repudiates as congenitally intolerable any suggestion of coercion from the outside."

Make Faces or Fight.

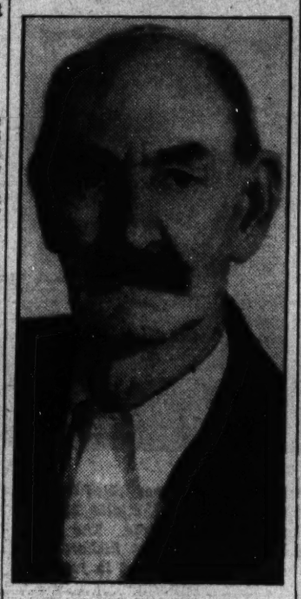
Maintaining that "it is indeed an act of intervention to refuse to recognize an international political fact because it is unwelcome," Borchard stated that the "non-recognition policy invites the alternative of either making faces or fighting."

Prof. Borchard further held that "survival of the idea of sanctions is devastating to international trade and international relations." He lashed out at use of the boycott and embargo, which, he said, has exactly the opposite effect from that intended.

Senator Homer T. Bone, of Washington, was chairman of the meeting.

Man Who Operated 26 Papers Gets Thrill Watching Presses

R. E. L. McLain Visits Post Just to Keep in Touch With Print Shop.



R. E. L. McLAIN.

R. E. L. McLain, who claims the distinction of owning and running 26 newspapers in 60 years in Texas and Oklahoma, drifted into The Washington Post office yesterday to say:

"I just got to get down to a print shop to do some talking. This stuff of sitting around home pounding a typewriter won't do."

So he crossed his long legs and proceeded to tell of early days in Baker County, Oreg., where he was born in 1864, and of Texas, where he broke into the newspaper business at the age of 14 in Seymour, the town his father founded on the plains.

"I can run every kind of a machine in a newspaper shop except those big rotary presses," he declared proudly, "but I just can't do a thing with them. But I like to come down and watch The Post presses run. (At a speed of 450 papers a minute.)

Only Printed One Page.

"Why, when I first started out we used an old Washington press which printed one page at a time, and you had to do everything by hand."

He was asked what he thought of the state of the Nation, but he wanted to talk about old Texas.

"In those old days I always was looking for greener pastures. I used to think the next town would be better than where I was, and then sometimes I'd go out and found a town and start a newspaper as soon as the first house was put up.

"In those days we carried the stones, the presses and the type around in wagons, and I often published the paper in a tent. Do you know that the Paul's Valley Enterprise, which I started up in Floyd County of the Indian Territory, is the oldest paper in Oklahoma?"

First Democrat Elected.

"Our family was lucky when we went to Texas from Oregon. My father, the first Democrat elected to the Oregon Legislature, had to leave for his health.

"So we rounded up our cattle and headed for Arizona. It was the year of Custer's massacre up in Montana, and the Comanches down in Nevada were acting up, but we didn't meet any. I knew lots of them in Texas, but they never bothered us."

He is staying at 1 Second street northeast for a couple of months and later will return to Fort Worth, Tex., 100 miles east of the town where he got fired from his first newspaper job for asking for a raise in pay from his 50 cents a week.

Rector Murdered For Vice Crusade, Coroner Indicates

St. Simons Island, Ga., Feb. 7 (AP).—The Rev. Dr. Charles Lee's attacks on vice might have caused his slaying at his home here Saturday night, Coroner J. D. Baldwin indicated today.

A bullet fired through a window killed the 71-year-old rector of historic Christ Episcopal Church as he sat in his study working on a sermon.

Officers, meanwhile, hunted the death weapon and also an automobile which they believe may have carried the slayer to and from the scene of the slaying.

Ickes Revives the Bathing Issue With Set of Hot Springs Rules

A short time ago his bathing habits became a public matter when Senator Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina, described to the Senate in admiring language the Secretary's bathroom in the new Interior Building.

Ickes retaliated with an invitation to Bailey "to come up and take a bath," but warned him to bring his own soap and towel.

Just when the matter seemed to have died down, or dried up, Secretary Ickes got back in the swimming news yesterday when his department issued these rules regarding the commercial bathhouses which get their water from Hot Springs National Park:

"Bathhouses or hotels," the regulations stated, will be allowed such number of tubs as the Secretary may in his discretion, deem proper and necessary for the public service and the amount of water will justify."

The rules didn't say whether the Secretary would determine the tubs and water by personal inspection and perhaps trial, but did add:

Children can't come in at half price.

No free bath tickets without written permission from the superintendent.

If a single-bath ticket buyer wants to get rubbed with a bath mitt, he'll have to bring his own. The bathhouse, however, must furnish each bather with a freshly laundered sheet.

No card playing while bathing.

hearing to restore their tissues. Not until 3:30 p. m. did he weaken, and that was partly because no witnesses remained.

An impressive list of celebrities lauded the principle of his measure yesterday, although dissertations on art and life generally by members of the committee consumed much more time than did Burgess Meredith, acting president, Actors' Equity and star of Maxwell Anderson's "Star Wagon;" Blanche Yurka, prominent stage-screen actress; Rockwell Kent, famous painter; Morris Watson, vice president, American Newspaper Guild; Erskine Caldwell, author "Tobacco Road" and "God's Little Acre;" Brock Pemberton, stage producer, and numerous others.

Committeemen Stunned.

A great many things developed during this testimony, some of which related to the idea of creating a Cabinet office whose incumbent would supervise the arts, sciences and literature. For instance:

Burgess Meredith, of the infectious smile, wavy-red hair, and soft voice, said: When the roads this Administration has built have disintegrated and the bridges fallen, it will be judged by its artistic achievements."

This thought seemed to stun several committee members, who could be seen vainly trying to check over the Administration's artistic achievements on their fingers. But when Meredith declared that more billions should be poured into relief to put actors to work, Representative Matthew A. Dunn (Democrat), Pennsylvania, chimed in enthusiastically:

"Keep up the fight—I'm with you. We're not going to be satisfied with one lousy billion for relief."

Rockwell Kent, arguing against "control of art by rich people," was questioned closely by Representative Thomas O'Malley, Democrat, Wisconsin, who asserted that politics might place in the Cabinet someone to administer such a department who knew nothing of art.

Watson Files Protest.

"Fine!" agreed Kent exuberantly. "I'd rather have people running it who knew nothing about art than to have at its head the so-called sophisticated, cultured people who run art today.

"I'd rather have John L. Lewis in charge of that department than the president of the National Academy!"

This, too, seemed to stun the committee members who hadn't gone to lunch, as Mr. Lewis' name hadn't figured thus far in the conversation.

Then Morris Watson protested against the suppression of two Federal Art Theater project-plays, "Stevedore," and "Judgment Day," by two Army officers, Col. Donald H. Connolly and Maj. L. D. Dillon, now in charge of WPA in Los Angeles

This being in his bailiwick, Representative Charles Kramer (Democrat), California, registered sharp interest, and he had Watson run over the situation again three or four times. Kramer was slightly handicapped by the misapprehension that Maj. Dillon's name was "Maj. Diddle," but at last he established that the plays hadn't yet been presented and went to lunch.

Farley as Art Head.

Miss Yurka, who wowed film customers as the vindictive old virago, Mme. Defarge, in the film of "Tale of Two Cities," declared that "no form of subsidy will bring as great an immediate return as a subsidy for actors."

Representative Karl Stefan (Republican), Nebraska, who wistfully inquired of each witness whether or not the motion picture, "David Copperfield" was great art, invariably learning that it was not, then left for lunch.

At this point Representative O'Malley and Chairman Sirovich agreed that Postmaster General James A. Farley would be a good man for this new Cabinet office, and O'Malley went to lunch.

Erskine Caldwell told the committee that writers would prefer to have their books sell for 50 cents each, instead of $2.50, in order to reach a wider public, and then he and nearly everybody else left for lunch.

Undaunted, Chairman Sirovich called for more witnesses, each hungrier looking than the last, and addressed the nearly empty room with a lengthy speech on the "living, spoken drama," declaring:

"If you destroy the living, spoken drama that now exists you will destroy more than the living, spoken drama; you will destroy not only the living, spoken drama, but the basis for the radio and for Hollywood, for the living, spoken drama is the framework of all of the other arts that stem from the living, spoken drama."

Hollywood Assailed.

By now everybody had gone to lunch except the three reporters and Brock Pemberton, the stage producer of "Strictly Dishonorable," "Personal Appearance" and other hits, who was just returning from lunch.

Pemberton assailed Hollywood's attacks on the stage, saying that "some day, when the pictures are wise, they will cultivate the stage instead of treating it as a rival." He said that the movies "don't train actors to become great; they just take stage people and pass them before the cameras."

By now Representative Stefan had returned from lunch and he asked Pemberton whether or not "David Copperfield" wasn't high art. Pemberton said it was not, but that it was a good copy of a masterpiece. So everybody seemed satisfied.

(Today's witnesses will include WPA officials in charge of art theater projects and Ina Claire, stage star, and her producer, Gilbert Miller.)

Lampooning Denied.

New York, Feb. 7 (AP).—The Federal theater project here denied today there was any intention to satirize three United States Senators in its current "Living Newspaper" production, "One-third of a Nation."

In Washington, Senator Charles O. Andrews (Democrat), of Florida, said on Sunday Federal relief funds "apparently had been used to hold up to ridicule" himself and Senators Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, and Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, through a skit depicting Senate debate on the slum clearance housing bill.

Arthur Arent, head dramatist of "The Living Newspaper," who prepared the script, said "every line in the speeches of the Senators comes out of the Congressional Record."

Glass Asks Loan Renewal.

Office-building and apartment-house superintendents, upon learning that charwomen and others included in the classification will be paid a weekly wage of $14.50, voiced approval.

Certain persons pointed out that the waitress' weekly scale of $13.25 after deduction of $4.60 for uniforms and meals, would net only $8.65, or about $2.65 above the average weekly scale at present.

Postal Ban Fought By Lottery Group

Arguments on an appeal by the National Conference of Legalizing Lotteries to prevent the Postoffice Department from interfering with its mail or otherwise hindering its operation were heard in the United States Court of Appeals yesterday.

The organization promoted a plan which called for payment of a $1 application fee, after which an applicant could suggest the best manner of disposing of a certain amount of money. Names of 16 worthy causes were listed and if he named the right one he was awarded an amount of money depending upon the number of persons purchasing tickets.

5 Schoolboys Drown Skating on Weak Ice

Boston, Feb. 7 (AP).—Thaw-weakened ice late today brought death by drowning to five Massachusetts schoolboys, scarcely 24 hours after three children and their would-be rescuer perished in a similar tragedy at Woonsocket, R. I.

George Smith, 9, and John Savenski, 7, drowned in Curtis Pond, near their Worcester homes. John Malakauska, 17; John Kinsella, 15, and his brother, Norman, 13, all of Brockton, crashed through the ice while skating on an isolated pond in that city.

countries caused hopes of speedy progress toward a new understanding.

Talks in Paris between Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos and Sir Eric Phipps, the British Ambassador, indicated that France had been drawn into the conversations.

The apparent imminence of friendship talks between Britain and Italy was shown by Eden's carefully phrased replies to a barrage of questions dealing with reported Italian implication in the piracy outbreak and Italian aid to the insurgents in the Spanish civil war.

Mussolini Perturbed.

Some diplomatic circles felt the internal shakeup in Germany partially had influenced the new Italian attitude toward Britain. These circles said Premier Benito Mussolini was perturbed over the resultant threat of new Nazi activity in central Europe.

Eden told Commons of the stringent protests made to the Spanish insurgents over the attacks on British shipping, but he answered softly the questions that tended to involve Italy.

Although he said the planes recently bombing Spanish government cities were Italian types, Eden insisted the Spanish combatants—not their outside helpers—must take full responsibility.

Official information, Eden said, failed to confirm reports Italy was planning to send new troops to Spain.

The foreign secretary declined to give a direct answer to questions concerning the reported Italian gift to the insurgents of the submarines that sank the British freighter Endymion.

Committee Backs Zoning Proposal

Principles of the zoning bill introduced by Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, with minor modifications, were approved yesterday by the executive committee of the Committee of 100 on the Federal City, meeting in the Cosmos Club.

The proposed law, modeled on the State enabling act adopted several years ago by the Department of Commerce, was drawn by a committee of experts. Its chief innovation would be creation of a board of adjustment similar to those in other cities.

The committee indorsed appointment of the Board of Zoning Adjustment and held that the authority proposed for this board would render it possible to waive or modify otherwise rigid requirements.

Band Who Sunk Merrimac in 1898 Thinned to Three

Lowell, Mass., Feb. 7 (AP).—Ranks of the gallant band of men who risked their lives to sink the U. S. S. Merrimac and bottle the Spanish fleet in Santiago Harbor, Cuba, in 1898, were thinned today by death of George Charette, retired Naval lieutenant.

Three survivors of the volunteer squad, captured after they had attempted to limit effectiveness of the Spanish fleet, are widely separated. They are Francis Kelley, of Glasgow, Scotland; Randolph Clausen, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and John E. Murphy, of San Diego, Calif. Rear Admiral Richmond Pearson Hobson, commander of the Merrimac, died in New York last year.

Charette's widow, the former Nadedja Pronina, whom he met while transporting Russian refugees from Constantinople in 1921, and a sister, Mrs. C. H. Davenport, of San Francisco, survive.

The body will be taken to Washington, D. C., Wednesday for burial in Arlingtin Cemetery.

Flexible Taxes For D. C.

In considering tax legislation for the District Congress is handicapped by the use of complicated law-making machinery for the accomplishment of a relatively simple task. That difficulty is always present in the enactment of local bills. But it becomes particularly acute when one committee attempts to draft a revenue bill to cover expenses largely under control of other committees.

If the new tax bill introduced by Representative Nichols of the House District Committee is accepted by Congress, it may raise more than twice as much revenue as is needed to meet the prospective deficit. From the viewpoint of local taxpayers that is obviously an unsatisfactory arrangement. On the other hand, Congress cannot be expected to adjust tax rates each year to precisely the amount needed to keep the Capital City out of debt. A more flexible arrangement is certainly desirable.

At present the District Commissioners have authority to adjust the tax rate on real estate according to revenue needs. There is no reason for Congress to change this rate. All that is necessary is for Congress to make unmistakably plain that the Commissioners are left free to bring about adjustments. If that is done, it will make little difference whether the rate is left at $1.75 per $1,000 of valuation in the present bill or reduced to $1.60.

The same principle applies with equal force to the proposed income tax. If Congress supplies the tax structure, the adjustment of rates to meet revenue needs might well be left to the local government. In this way the collection of excessive revenue could be avoided. And Congress would be relieved of the necessity of passing petty tax amendments every year.

To make such a system operate satisfactorily, however, obsolete and inequitable tax measures ought to be repealed. With the adoption of an income tax, the discredited levy on intangible property should certainly be wiped out. Even though the committee has amended the business privilege tax to make it less objectionable, the period of its application should be limited. Indeed, it would be unreasonable to re-enact this levy at all unless the rates of permanent tax laws can be adjusted to avoid the piling up of a surplus.

District leaders in both the Senate and House seem to be convinced that more power should be granted to the Commissioners to handle routine municipal affairs. They have an excellent opportunity to apply that principle in the pending revenue legislation. The proposal to set up a sound tax system and leave responsibility for rates to local officials should be especially welcome to members of Congress because of the political significance frequently attached to votes on District revenue measures. In this way Congress could relieve itself of the entire problem, except as changes in the system might be occasionally necessary.

The Niemoeller Trial.

It is not so much the Rev. Martin Niemoeller as the Third Reich itself which is on trial in Berlin today.

Niemoeller, one-time submarine commander, has become a living symbol of orthodox Protestant resistance to the attempted Nazification of religion in Germany. His fate, as none realizes more clearly than he, is bound up with the fate of religious freedom in that land.

What gives particular point to the situation is that at no time has Niemoeller shown any disposition to challenge the political doctrines of the Nazi regime.

On the contrary, he joined the Nazis long before the Hitler government came into power, regarding it then as a potentially valuable instrument of national regeneration. And, like the overwhelming majority of his fellow pastors, he is still prepared to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. But he opposes any and all efforts to lay profane hands on the sacred fundamentals of his religion. On this issue he sees no possibility of compromise. Nor have seven months of imprisonment broken his spirit.

No wonder, then, that his plea for an open trial has met with an unfavorable response by the judges. They realize that his popularity is such that to permit him to speak out in open court might prove dangerous. For from the witness stand Niemoeller might stir the very large element of orthodox Protestants to a new determination to resist the totalitarian state in matters affecting the freedom of worship.

The powers-that-be, therefore, prefer to cover the Niemoeller trial with a blanket of silence and secrecy. No better proof is needed of the unpopularity of the efforts to paganize the Christian Church in Germany. By the same token the Nazi authorities are paying the highest tribute to Niemoeller's power, courage, sincerity and eloquence.

Reply To A Candid Critic.

A letter which we print today from Commissioner Leiserson, of the National Mediation Board, sharply challenges certain statements made in a recent editorial dealing with the national labor relations act. In that editorial The Post condemned the exclusive emphasis of this law upon unfair employer practices and noted that it makes the board "a protector of labor rather than an impartial mediator between employers and employes."

Since Mr. Leiserson in his reply inferentially concedes the truth of these allegations, it is not clear why he should assume that The Post's criticisms betray ignorance of the subject under discussion. Both before and since passage of the Wagner act, The Post has on numerous occasions discussed this law and made detailed criticisms thereof. Attention has repeatedly been called to the discriminatory effect of a law which protects employes against specified unfair employer practices while neglecting to set up standards of fair practice to which employes should be expected to conform.

Furthermore, The Post has constantly emphasized the underlying significance for the trade union movement of legislation which makes the promotion of organized labor a Government responsibility. When the bill was passed we pointed out that it established unprecedented rights for trade unionism. And we then said that "it must in the long run follow that unprecedented responsibilities will be exacted by the state as the counterpart of those rights."

These predictions are already finding confirmation in the growing demand for amendments to the labor relations act designed to make unions responsible for illegal activities by their membership, and to impose upon the unions legal obligations to uphold collective bargaining agreements. Certainly employers have little incentive to co-operate wholeheartedly in making the Wagner act effective unless they have some assurance that employes will live up to their half of the bargain.

By a series of rhetorical questions Mr. Leiserson seeks to convey the impression that a demand for equal protection for employers and employes is foolish and futile. If one accepts his restricted definition of employer rights, this contemptuous dismissal of an argument would be justified. But the rights which The Post has in mind are of a more fundamental character. They include rights to protection against strikes which disrupt agreements freely entered into by the unions and rights to claim damages in case of destruction or loss resulting from failure to observe the terms of contracts.

The Post is, of course, well aware that the national labor relations act is not a mediation law. But that fact does not preclude an editorial suggestion that the law might be improved by amendments enabling the board to engage in mediatory activities. The outbreak of "sit-down" strikes, the violent and prolonged suspension of operations in some of the Nation's great industrial plants following passage of the Wagner act, certainly indicate the need for more vigorous mediatory intervention than the Department of Labor has provided.

In its latest annual report the NLRB stated that its regional directors have in many instances adjusted labor disputes on request and have also induced the parties to disputes to arbitrate their differences. The board admits, however, that its jurisdiction over such cases is "doubtful," while maintaining that the work has "been an important contribution to the industrial peace of the regions involved." That being the situation, it seems distinctly in order to suggest that the NLRB might be able to function more effectively if it were given power to intervene in conflicts between employers and employes.

There are many arguments that can be advanced against a proposal to enlarge the already extraordinary power of the NLRB, to include mediation activities, especially before collective bargaining has been well established. Secretary Perkins has set forth those arguments cogently in opposing suggestions that the methods of mediation employed under the railway labor act should be applied to the maritime industry. Her objections would have even greater force in the present case.

Nevertheless, the question is decidedly open for public discussion, in view of the urgent need for more effective means of preventing a repetition of the losses and disorders which have already resulted from efforts to give effect to collective bargaining under the Wagner act.

WPA's Dramatic License.

In one of New York's WPA theater projects, Senators Tydings, Byrd and Andrews are depicted as villains in a play that casts Senator Wagner as the public-spirited protagonist of slum clearance. The scene which has aroused the maligned three is laid in the Senate chamber and the dialogue is culled from the Congressional Record. But the Senators who are held up to public scorn protest that their remarks have been torn from the context in a way to distort their meaning. Moreover, no mention is made of the fact that Senator Andrews voted for the Wagner slum clearance bill, while Senator Byrd's criticisms led to desirable changes in the measure.

Even if the three Senators merited the liberal boos and hisses said to be the reward of the actors who impersonate them, their conduct would not be an appropriate subject for a WPA play. Such an astounding display of effrontery has an amusing side, but that should not blind one to its sinister implications. Using Federal relief funds to discredit members of the Congress that appropriated those funds is an inexcusable impropriety. But much more serious is the precedent established for the commission of similar indiscretions by other WPA groups and governmental agencies.

If this is a sample of WPA's dramatic art, what is to hinder its actors from portraying all the Congressmen who vote for reduction of relief costs as oppressors of the poor? For that matter, why should not Government bureaus and agencies train their publicity guns against Congressmen who cut down their appropriations or obstruct their cherished plans? The unpleasant possibilities opened up by this dramatic assault upon senatorial reputations are seemingly endless. WPA officials supervising Federal theater projects should be made to understand that such outrageous misuse of relief money will not be tolerated.

Liberty-loving Americans value freedom of speech on the stage as elsewhere, provided it does not degenerate into license. But a publicly financed theater is not free to indulge in criticism of public servants, even less to malign them unjustly and possibly weaken the political support upon which they depend as officeholders.

The Cotton Farmers' Bonus.

With attention concentrated on the coercive provisions and confused language of the farm bill, the special bonus which Senator Smith has included for cotton farmers almost escaped notice. Fortunately it has now been discovered, however, and a determined fight against it is in prospect.

The Administration made a very serious mistake in 1934 when it attempted to peg the price of cotton at 12 cents a pound. Farmers took advantage of the 12-cent loan by dumping a vast amount of cotton into the Government's lap. The result was substantial losses to taxpayers and a shrinkage of the export market to the detriment of cotton growers themselves.

In spite of the lesson that should have been learned from that experience, Chairman Smith of the Senate Agriculture Committee has injected an amendment into the conference bill that would virtually duplicate the blunder of 1934. Cotton is now selling at an average of about 8.60 cents per pound. But, in effect, Senator Smith would require the Commodity Credit Corporation to buy an enormous amount of cotton at approximately 12 cents per pound and withhold it from the market.

Already the Commodity Credit Corporation has made loans of 9 cents per pound on 1937 cotton, with the promise of price adjustments not to exceed 3 cents per pound payable after June. But Senator Smith was not satisfied with that very liberal arrangement. He would require the Government, at the request of producers, to take over all cotton on which these loans have been made. The Government would "assume all obligations of the producer with respect to the loan," including interest and carrying charges. And producers would be immediately paid an extra 2 cents per pound that might later be deducted from their price adjustment payments, if any.

But, having taken over this cotton at a very unreasonable price, the Commodity Credit Corporation would be forbidden to sell any cotton at a loss. The probable result would be to impound nearly 5,000,000 bales for an indefinite period, at least until the price could be raised to around 12 cents. Even then the bill would forbid the sale of more than 1,500,000 bales in any one year.

The amendment is at direct variance with the general principle of the farm bill, for its special bounty to cotton growers would be paid whether or not farmers have cooperated with the soil-conservation program. Yet in some respects it is a forewarning of what the Administration can expect when the Government has assumed primary responsibility for prosperity on the farm.

Secretary Wallace is said to be vigorously opposed to this amendment. Others who are trying realistically to visualize the effects of political control over farming are more likely to see in it another powerful argument against the entire bill.

A man walking barefoot in a heavy snowstorm in New York City last week was found to have $2,338 in a bag around his neck. It seems strange that a man with that much money wouldn't buy shoes to walk around in a snowstorm with, but it may be that he was saving his money for a rainy day.

That African Eldorado.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mussolini tried to justify his conquest of Abyssinia on various counts. Before the bar of the world's opinion, it was the unprovoked attacks of Ethiopian soldiers on Italians. For home consumption, Adowa of ranking memory was to be avenged. In his grandiose delusions of reviving the imperial splendors of the Caesars, lands were to be seized that would pour a golden flood into the coffers of Rome.

Haile Selassie is in exile and the Italian flag floats over Addis Ababa, but the stream of wealth has not yet begun to flow Romeward. To the contrary, Italy has just allocated, by dictatorial decree, 12,000,000,000 lire ($631,000,000) for a six-year public works program in Ethiopia. The expenditure may vindicate Il Duce's judgment. An able American engineer named Herbert Hoover, who some years ago surveyed the country for its mineral possibilities, returned an unfavorable report. In any event, the adventure is to prove a costly investment for Italy, in money as well as blood and bad faith, before that jagged desert flows with milk and honey.

And the Ethiopian legation in London sends out the news that some 6,000 Italians and native conscripts have been killed in Ethiopia during the last two months.

Veteran To Veteran.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Drafted Man's" letter calls for comment.

This veteran, although his pension for service-connected arrested tuberculosis was cut from $80 per month, still gets $50 per month and will continue to draw this amount for the rest of his life.

He states that "under President Wilson" he received $30 monthly, but paid his expenses in a private sanitarium out of his life savings. If he did this he must have done so out of preference, for the Government has always furnished hospitalization for such cases, either in its own hospitals or, if these were not available, paid for hospitalization in civilian hospitals. (This latter practice of allowing the patient to go into a civilian hospital has long been discontinued because of the abuse it led to on the part of certain veterans.)

If "Drafted Man" still has active tuberculosis he can go to a Government tuberculosis sanitarium. If his tuberculosis is in an arrested state, which is most likely after all these years, he need not feel himself a "social outcast." He seems to take a morbid view of his condition, and perhaps this is why others fear contact with him, as he claims. I am well acquainted with two veterans who have arrested tuberculosis. They hold responsible positions, work hard every day, do not feel themselves social outcasts, and they are very appreciative of the $50 monthly pension which, of course, comes in handy.

We Sit Corrected.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In discussing the Zoo's prospects for welcoming a "penguinette" into its bird house around March 1, The Post of February 5 declared that the prospective aunts and uncles were behaving themselves pretty well under stress of the excitement, adding "although every now and then one comes over as if to annoy the setter."

A "setter" is a dog. "Sitter" is what is meant.

Webster's New International gives: "Sit—to cover and warm eggs for hatching . . . Sitter—a bird that sits or incubates. Sit—to brood; as a 'sitting hen.'"

Middle Class View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that the big and little businessmen have finished their conferences at the White House, I think it is only fair that the "Forgottenmen" (the middle class) should have an opportunity to put a finger in the pie.

Taking the forward step in this idea, the following will be my preliminary points toward recovery:

1. That the businessmen of the Nation will agree to a substantial reduction of prices in order to create the demand.

2. That they will agree to the reduction of profits, creating a legal profit system.

3. That they will open work for all those who are willing and able to work, in order to create the purchasing power.

4. That they will agree to make a standard of wages, both for minimum and maximum salaries.

5. That the plan be carried on for not less than three years.

Out of the businessmen's conference at the White House nothing but one thing has been made clear—that of the ham; they want the meat and that the bone is for the rest of people of the nation to chew on.

At Fourteenth And Upshur.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am wondering what is going to happen to that plot of ground located at Fourteenth and Upshur streets northwest. It would be very unfortunate indeed if the buildings were used, regardless of how much space is needed, for hospitals.

I can see a very pretty park at the Fourteenth and Upshur location, something that part of the city needs badly. My suggestion would be to have a bandstand with a roof large enough to house as many as several thousand in case of rain or in the cold weather. FELIX A. URY.

Degraded Capital Parks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was pleasant to see the recent picture in The Post of winter grass on the White House lawn so thriving and green that it was being cut with a lawn mower. The picture was also an excellent advertisement for Washington as a winter resort, calling attention to our mild, semi-tropical climate.

I wonder if it would not be possible, however, to spread around a bit some of the landscaping beauty that now seems to be concentrated entirely in the White House grounds. While this park is tended and flourishing, never in the memory of the oldest inhabitant have the other downtown public park areas looked so utterly barren and brown.

Before the so-called "rehabilitation program" to which the parks were subjected two years ago, Lafayette Square, Dupont Circle, Farragut Square, Washington Circle, the two West End Pennsylvania triangles and the rest were beauty spots, green the year round with grass and evergreens. Now, in spite of the frequent rains they are brown and bleak with only the feeblest tufts of occasional grass, if any.

I wonder that the Chamber of Commerce, Board of Trade, Real Estate Board and other organizations representative of invested capital do not realize that this degrading of the public parks is enormously detrimental to all downtown real estate values. Their united demands on the National Capital Parks Service should bring about a remedy of this deplorable condition.

On Standardizing Wages.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All the current talk, both in and out of Congress, about increasing or standardizing wages regardless of production is as futile as talk about regulating the rise and fall of the tide or of improving the law of gravity.

The only source of wages is what the workers produce and the only way to increase wages and purchasing power is to make possible increased per capita production.

No matter what the figures on your pay check may be, you can't eat the check. The check merely shows what your individual contribution to the common product has been and you have for your own use only that part of what you produced that the Government hasn't taken away. Government interference and social experimenting makes your share just so much less and cuts down purchasing power of the producers, leaving the community so much the poorer. Any group that succeeds, through organization or political pull, in increasing its per capita wage, without corresponding increase in its per capita production, is simply taking the increase out of the less fortunately placed worker.

Why can't we use some of our declining common sense about these fundamental economic truths?

Butaritari Flash.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Advices from Butaritari are that the confinement of the Princess Kaela is expected about March 20. She is the wife of Prince Malatea and daughter of King Nanamtei and is heiress to the throne of Raratonga.

As the press has gone into the business of exploiting all the specimens of surviving royalty, I am sure this information will be of great interest and value to you and will enable you to furbish up another editorial setting forth the blessings of monarchies and royal heirs. In these mawkish genuflections, I am confident you will not wish to discriminate against Butaritari. The King of Raratonga is as much of a King as the King of England and rules by as much right and, in the island world at least, is of much more importance.

"The Trouble Is In The Law."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of January 30, "The Trouble Is In The Law," is remarkable for its confusion about the national labor relations act. Says the editorial: "The employer is not accorded equal protection against unfair employe practices nor is he granted any right to appeal to the board." Then it goes on to say that the law makes the board "a protector of labor rather than an impartial mediator between employers and employes."

Anyone who has read the law must know that it is not a mediation law and was not designed as such. When the President approved the act he issued a statement explaining that its purpose is to protect labor's right to organize and bargain collectively, and not to mediate. He stated that the Department of Labor would continue to act as the mediation agency through its division of conciliation.

I take it that you do not question the need for protecting working people in their right to organize and bargain collectively. Then what do you mean by according employers equal protection against unfair employe practices? Would you amend the law to provide that no employe or labor organization shall interfere with the right of an employer to join an employers' association? Would you prohibit employes from influencing or coercing employers to join or not to join an employers' organization?

These are the kinds of unfair labor practices that the labor relations act prohibits. Can it be that you think that employes interfere with the organization rights of employers? Congress knew that employes are in no position to prevent employers from organizing and that unions do not attempt to interfere with employers' freedom to organize. Therefore, equal protection is achieved by guaranteeing to employes the same rights that employers freely enjoy.

So far as appealing to the board is concerned, employers get this result by simply refusing to deal with any representatives of the employes until the board certifies that they are the legally authorized representatives. This forces the employes to go to the board for an election and certification. The remedy being in the employers' own hands with respect to the recognition of representatives, an appeal to the board would be superfluous.

On the other hand, the right of the employer to appeal from decisions of the board is more than fully protected; for as the Supreme Court decided on January 31, no order of the board is self-enforcing. The employer is free to disobey it, and the board is forced to go to the courts for enforcement of its orders.

Is it too much to expect that editorial writers shall be informed about the laws they condemn?

The Post Impressionist

Mr. Mountain Sees Us Through.

THE doorbell sounded—two brisk buzzes. Mother looked up eagerly. "Why, that must be Mr. Mountain, the good old thing," she said.

Sally and I exchanged despairing glances. Mr. Mountain was the postman, and a "good old thing" if there ever was one. But neither of us looked forward with any enthusiasm to seeing Mr. Mountain at the present moment.

We were being "at home to friends" the second day after the death of the household's only son, and everything had been going very well until now. Neighbors who arrived in a state of red-eyed sympathy went away still sympathetic but far happier. It was now nearly 9 o'clock; there had been some 300 callers, and Sally and I were hopeful that the present guests would leave before the inevitable moment when tired nerves would give way.

And here was Mr. Mountain upon us.

Mr. Mountain was the first friend we made after settling in the small New England city six years before. He put in his round-faced, apple-cheeked appearance the day we arrived. "No mail today, folks," he said, "but I thought I'd just stop in to see how you're getting along."

It was not the last time he "just stopped in." A momentous precedent was set soon afterward when he buzzed the doorbell and asked mother, completely without embarrassment, if he might make use of our bathroom facilities. Mother, according to the letter I received from her later at college, blushed and mumbled "First door to the right at the top of the stairs." From then on our house was a second home to Mr. Mountain. The only threat to his security occurred some months later when a visiting aunt, unversed in friendly New England ways, saw his broad gray form emerge from the first door to the right and amble down the stairs. Had she not been forced to ask mother the telephone number of the police station before dialing it, Mr. Mountain might not be buzzing our doorbell that snowy Sunday night.

It did not take Mr. Mountain long to learn nearly all there was to know about our family. I was a constant trial to him. Every vacation he would "just stop in" to give me a good-natured lecture on filial duty as it relates to letter writing. He would dwell in some detail on the anguished tones in which mother asked him, day after day, if there were a Wellesley postmark among his letters.

All that was sheer fiction, of course. Mother had told me long before about the "Mountain code," according to which one ring of the doorbell meant "just bills," two rings stood for "nothing interesting but I'd like to come in for a minute" and three rings meant "Wellesley postmark."

No one took greater interest in my trip to Germany three years ago than did Mr. Mountain. It was that summer that the Mountain code broke down entirely. Six erratic buzzes brought mother running to the door one day two weeks after I sailed, to find Mr. Mountain, his broad face all aglow, flourishing a postcard I had mailed from Southampton. "It was a rough trip," he said ecstatically before mother had a chance to snatch the card from him, "but she wasn't seasick!"

That fall Sally went away to college and the code was expanded to include four buzzes. Additional complications set in last September, when Dave started in at prep school. Dave never was much of a problem to Mr. Mountain, however. His letters arrived each Monday morning with a regularity which suggested enforced Sunday correspondence hours. That is, to everyone but Mr. Mountain. To him, Dave's letters were but one more proof of the boys' perfection, a point on which he and mother were in complete agreement.

Hence my nervousness in opening the door to Mr. Mountain. To both mother and father I knew he would suggest but one thing—no more letters from Dave. I dreaded the sight of his simple countenance, cloaked, as I was sure it would be, in a fittingly lugubrious mask.

I opened the door. Mr. Mountain thrust his head in—and beamed! "How are you all, folks?" he said, in the confident tone of one who knows without asking that all is well.

"I happened to pass the postoffice and saw quite a stack of letters for you. Yesterday being New Year's and today Sunday, they've sort of piled up." He submitted to mother's embrace only as long as he considered necessary, and handed her the fat bunch of letters of condolence. One of them, we found later, was an expensively ornate card signed "George D. Mountain."

He chatted with mother and father for a moment, then eased me out into the hall. "Here are some others," he said almost gruffly when we were out of earshot. "Thought they might upset your mother." There were three or four envelopes—one a bill from Popular Mechanics, the others inscribed in that stylized backhand characteristic of adolescent girlhood—addressed to Dave.

"Well, folks, it's getting late," he said heartily as we re-entered the living room and he reached for his overcoat.

I shook hands with him and promised to be more conscientious in my letter-writing. "Well," he said tolerantly, "I don't mind if they don't come so regular, just so's there's a good thick one once in a while."

Morse Men.

THE MORSE telegraph operators are a noble but vanishing breed done out of their jobs by the coffee grinders which can push copy along at an average rate of 45 or 50 words a minute.

PEGLER.

The coffee grinder falters at nothing, whereas Morse men dropped their average through necessary pauses for unusual words or combinations of figures requiring special care.

Not many years ago the only mechanical telegraph device in the United Press office in Chicago was the ticker, a nervous contrivance of buzzing gears and rubber letters and numerals enclosed under an inverted gold fish bowl, which supplied the stock quotations and, along in the afternoon, the baseball scores. It also delivered a great deal of pi, for the tape was constantly jumping the sprockets and choking the machinery.

The wheels containing the rubber letters and numerals would ink themselves against a pad on the recoil and jerk against the tape in an ill-tempered manner. The print often was illegible. It was an evil gadget in its smudgy black heat, and it sired the suave, cold-blooded teletypes of the present day which have driven the Morse men to make-do jobs or to poverty and all but extinguished a trade, which, at its best, was something of an art and mystery.

• • • •

THE MORSE MEN sitting around the outside of the rim, jiggling their bugs on the West wire or catching the report off the East, were oblivious of the fish bowl and unaware of any omen in its waspish buzz and rasp. They sent on the West and received from the East because news, like the light of day and the darkness of night, travels from east to west. An Eastern murder, for example, has more prestige than a killing of equal parts occurring to the west of it.

Today, in the office of the U. P., there are only three Morse men left and only one working a wire. He is the Postal man. The other two are Roscoe Johnson, the chief operator and former president of the union, whose job is executive and technical, and Tom Curran, in the business end. Mr. Johnson was one of the aristocrats of a proud craft who worked on the rim in the days when the fish bowl was buzzing its threat in the corner and spitting its tape into a tall wire basket. Mr. Curran at that time was a Western Union messenger in Lincoln, Nebr., learning to tap out simple words and phrases, as stiff as linoleum cuts and dreaming of a day when he would be qualified to hang up his coat and do a trick in any shop in the country.

• • • •

MR. CURRAN was picked green in 1917 when many of the grown men, including Mr. Johnson, who had soldiered in '98, rushed into the Signal Corps and away. Although still a novice he was thrown into a job as a fully qualified Morse man in Charles City, Iowa, a busy wire because the Hart-Parr Tractor Co. was beating plowshares into swords for the Government. He faltered badly, and one day the man who was sending from St. Paul broke into an Army blurt of those vivid consonant groups with which Morse men can insult one another over long distances.

"You are no gentleman," Mr. Curran replied.

"Oh, you are a lady?" the man in St. Paul asked.

"Excuse me. I will go slowly and carefully."

The gentleman in St. Paul—for he was indeed a gentleman—thereafter sent only nice round dots and nice long dashes, and Mr. Curran was really learning telegraphy. He refused to answer Chicago or Sioux City, forcing them to route their stuff through the gentleman in St. Paul.

The gentleman asked the lady's name and was told that it was Miss Dorcas Wing. He wrote and Miss Wing wrote back. He asked for her picture and Dorcas, however, ceased to write and failed to answer from a photographer's files.

Eventually the gentleman in St. Paul wrote that he had been drafted and was on his way to camp. Dorcas, however, ceased to write and failed to answer even his lonely letters from France signed "Your Soldier Boy."

The Crucial Year

Paris Observer Sees Domestic Unrest In France And Crisis In Russia Undermining Central Europe's Vital Stability.

By Europax.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

1938 has been selected by many political prophets as Europe's "crucial year." Put into plain words, their prophecy means that a European war is extremely probable this year. Without concurring in these forebodings—I do not believe the profession of prophet is compatible with that of journalist—certain hard facts about the world situation today must be faced.

Looking backward, for instance (an easier and perhaps more profitable form of prophecy!), one cannot avoid the following summary:

1935: Italo-Ethiopian war.
1936: International civil war in Spain.
1937: Sino-Japanese war.
1938: ?

One might even go a bit farther back and put down 1931-2-5: Gran Chaco war in South America.

The main point is clear—the world in 1938 may not be at war, but it is certainly not entirely at peace; and it is as impossible to predict with assurance that there will be no war in Europe this year as it would have been to foresee the South American conflict in 1932, the African struggle in 1935, the Spanish strife in 1936, or the Sino-Japanese war in Asia last year.

The best that can be done is to analyze the situation as it appears in Europe, now that 1938 is well under way. This much is certain from such a broad survey: So far, at any rate, no major European conflict is in sight.

Old World Peace Hinges On Mittel-Europe's Future.

THE CORE of Europe's peace puzzle is still central and eastern Europe. The Danube still winds its way like a long fuse to and through the Balkan powder barrel. There are other explosive spots on the map, of course. Some observers still believe Spain may explode and cause a general European conflagration. Others are convinced Italy must fight England this year in the Mediterranean, because next year the British fleet will have been built up to a position of clear superiority over the Italian navy and air force. Finally, some think the Asiatic conflict will drag in England, America and eventually the rest of the world.

None of these hypotheses can be absolutely discarded, but to me none of them seems probable or imminent. Peace in Europe still hinges primarily upon developments in central Europe, and particularly upon the relations of these eastern European nations with France nad Germany.

Just 10 months ago, in my first article for this column, I wrote: "What is going on behind the scenes in central Europe . . . is nothing less than a vast diplomatic maneuver, an attempt to shift the European balance of power by breaking, or at least loosening, the liens that tie the Little Entente to France." Today it is only too apparent that this was the case then and is still the case at present.

When last April I wrote that the recently concluded Italo-Yugoslav pact was "the thin edge of the wedge inserted between France and the Little Entente," the thrust went home—it produced a protest from the Yugoslav ambassador in Washington. Events since then, and especially in the past month or so, have fully confirmed this trend.

As I wrote last year, "the changes will be slow." The effort to shift the European scene, to melt and remold the balance of power on the Continent, is a slow process, and it is even now incomplete. But the shift is definitely under way. Its significance is tremendous, because the whole post-war system of alliances built up by France under the aegis of the League of Nations to crystallize and defend the status quo is at stake.

Evidence Of Wedge Seen Following Tour By Delbos.

THE EXTENT to which the movement is making headway came out clearly during and especially after the tour of the French foreign minister, Yvon Delbos, to Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia.

Hardly had he reached home and made the customary optimistic statements to the cabinet about having found French prestige higher than ever and France's allies reinforced by his visits than the Rumanian "coup de theater" occurred. King Carol suddenly appointed as premier Octavian Goga, an ardent admirer of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. A violent anti-Semite, Goga is also distinguished from the French point of view as the only one of a score of Rumanian party leaders who voiced sentiments hostile to France during a ceremony in the Rumanian Parliament when Louis Barthou visited Bucharest in 1934.

Opinions differ as to the meaning of this move in Rumania. Some say that King Carol is using Goga only provisionally to pull him through a tight political squeeze. Be that as it may, it seems clear to me that Rumania has taken the first step onto a slippery chute leading downward to totalitarian dictatorship and to consequent close collaboration with the other Fascist powers—Italy and Germany.

At the same time Yugoslavia has been moving closer to Italy and Germany. So far there may be nothing final about this trend. But it is sufficiently marked to have caused France—which for a decade or more had been financing the re-armament of these two countries—to suddenly stop and consider very seriously ending all shipments of arms and munitions to both Rumania and Yugoslavia.

Anxious not to precipitate this gravitation toward the Berlin-Rome axis, the French government has taken no definite decision yet. But Belgrade and Bucharest have been warned diplomatically, and actually it is admitted that French rearmament of these two countries has come to a close, although existing contracts may be executed. In other words, the thin edge of the wedge has now gone a long way into the wood. France's ties with the Little Entente, though they have not yet been completely broken, have certainly been greatly weakened. And simultaneously Germany's hold on these countries has been strengthened.

It is an open question whether France's alliance with Poland has not been equally weakened of late, despite the declaration to the contrary on the part of both Polish Foregin Minister Beck and Delbos last December. For one thing, Poland itself is disunited at the moment. There is a strong movement there in favor of a totalitarian state which would almost inevitably gravitate toward the Rome-Berlin axis should it materalize. At all events, it is a fact that France, although she clings to the Polish alliance, does not pin much faith in it.

Czechoslovakia, of course, remains faithful to France—and so far, France to Czechoslovakia. But even in the case of Prague, this allegiance is no longer unquestioning. Officially the French government remains bound to rush to the aid of the Czechs should Germany start trouble. But it is nevertheless true that both Paris and Prague are studying an alternative policy—a policy of entente with Berlin. It must be repeated that this is only a trend, and might be reversed very quickly, but it is undoubtedly on the march.

Uncertainties In France And Russia Explain Tension.

WHAT ARE the underlying reasons for this fluid state of central Europe? They are two: The internal troubles of France, and the internal crisis in Soviet Russia.

With the franc down to one-tenth its pre-war value and still sliding; with production lagging in nearly all important branches of industry, especially those connected with national defense; with the treasury in almost chronic difficulty, and with social agitation smoldering under the surface, France has her hands full at home, unwilling though she may be to admit it.

At the same time Soviet Russia is shaken by "purges" about which the outside world knows little, but which have certainly rocked the Bolshevist regime as it has not been rocked since its origin. The effects of this internal crisis have been particularly evident in the field of diplomacy. Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff, challenged in Moscow, squeezes through safely at home but finds most of his ablest ambassadors and diplomatic agents in the principal European capital imprisoned or exiled or worse. As a member of the French general staff said to me the other day: "What help can we expect from a country in such a state?" It must be kept in mind that France's alliances with the Little Entente presuppose Soviet support.

Thus Europe, and especially central Europe, is at present shifting uncertainly. Its state seems to me fluid rather than crucial. Only time will tell what the rest of 1938 has in store.

Army and State

By

The Crisis In Germany.

EVERY GOVERNMENT, no matter what its nature, must, in the last analysis, rest either on a foundation of popular consent or on one of armed might.

In democratic countries the armed forces are but the instruments of the popular will as manifested in a freely elected government. They can have no existence outside of and apart from the apparatus of the state. In a dictatorship, however, the regime must, perforce, depend for its maintenance and survival on armed force, be that armed force the regular military establishment, a private army, an extensive police system or it may be a combination of these elements.

To be sure, dictatorships also seek through censorship, propaganda and terrorism to win the consent or at least the acquiescence of the people. Indeed, it is their frequent boast that in this particular they have succeeded far beyond the wildest dreams of the democracies. Even President Roosevelt's great majority in 1936, they point out, pales by comparison with the all but unanimous votes cast for Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin in Nazi, Fascist and Communist plebiscites.

• • • •

BUT NO ONE knows better than the dictators how unreliable these votes are as a measure of popular approval of their regimes. Necessarily, therefore, they live in constant fear of an opposition which, publicly, they proclaim to be nonexistent.

They are, however, in no danger of overthrow so long as armed forces are willing to do their bidding. One man with a machine gun can cow a multitude of unarmed individuals. And an army loyal to a dictator can, conceivably, keep him in power even when the populace has grown to hate him.

But for this very reason there is always a danger that the armed force instead of remaining a servant of the regime may become its master.

EVERY DICTATOR, therefore, finds it necessary to do two things with a view to maintaining unimpaired the basis of his regime. He must, in the first place, propitiate the armed forces. But, at the same time, he cannot permit the army to dominate his regime.

Thus despite outward appearances, dictatorial systems, too, have their checks and balances with the equilibrium of forces never more than temporarily stable.

An excellent illustration of this is found in Nazi Germany. In 1934 the Hitler dictatorship was backed up by three armed bodies—the regular army, which, true to its tradition of not mixing up in politics, had accepted Hitler as previously it had accepted the republic; the brown-shirted S. A. or storm troopers upon whose shoulders Hitler had risen to power, and the black-shirted S. S. or Elite Guard.

All three were loyal to Hitler. But between them a violent conflict had arisen. Capt. Roehm, the leader of the S. A., wanted his men incorporated in the army and given ranks compensurate with their services to the Nazi Party.

This demand the army resisted. On June 30 the army won out; Capt. Roehm and many other Nazi "radicals" were "liquidated" and the S. A. ceased having any importance from that time on. Interestingly enough, it was not the army which carried out the blood purge of the "Night of the Long Knives," but the S. S. under Heinrich Himmler.

SINCE THEN both the army and the Elite Guard with its appendage in the form of the Gestapo, the Nazi secret police, have grown in power. To provide the army with the supplies necessary for its upbuilding, the whole economic system of the Reich has been transformed. Every other consideration has been subordinated to that of rearmament with the result that, today, Germany has one of the most formidable fighting machines in Europe. But the stronger it grew the greater the possibility that the army tail might sooner or later wag the Nazi dog.

To prevent that, the Hitler regime saw to it that as rapidly and as extensively as possible the armed forces should be impregnated with a Nazi Weltanschauung (philosophy). Thus the Aryan law was applied to the army as well as in civilian matters; Nazi doctrines were taught to recruits and a pro-Nazi general, Von Blomberg, was named as minister of war.

AS A PROFESSIONAL body, apparently disinterested in politics, the army did not protest these measures. But in that field of action closely related to war, namely, foreign affairs, the army's viewpoint has been more outspoken.

It was no doubt because of army pressure that Hitler renewed the Russo-German treaty of 1926, originally negotiated by the late Dr. Stresemann. It was also because of army pressure that despite the pleas of Mussolini, the Third Reich limited its commitments in Spain.

In both of these particulars the views of the extreme Nazis—the Goebbels-Himmler-Rosenberg-Ribbentrop factions lost out. No wonder, then, that they sought either to neutralize the influence of the army or, as was true of Himmler, take over the direction of the Reichswehr.

THUS THE EQUILIBRIUM established between army and party following the blood purge of June 30, 1934, began soon after to be upset. The marriage of Marshal von Blomberg precipitated the struggle.

Despite Hitler's drastic coup, the final issue remains in doubt. In view of the retirement of Von Fritsch and of 13 other generals who purportedly sided with him in his opposition to Blomberg as well as of the shifting of 22 other generals to new posts, the presumption is that the conservative element in the army has been subjected to a purge and that, henceforth, the army will be a more pliant instrument of the Nazi Party.

That remains to be seen. The fact that no ardent Nazis were appointed to the command of the army, that Hitler decided, a la Mussolini, to take over the war office post himself, indicates that the victory of the Nazis in this particular may prove more seeming than real.

Of greater moment is the appointment of Ribbentrop to the foreign ministry. As architect of the German-Japanese anti-Comintern agreement, ardent supporter of the Berlin-Rome axis and of an ambitious colonial policy, Ribbentrop is likely to reflect the foreign policy expounded by the extreme Nazi faction.

In this particular, therefore, the Hitler coup gives real cause for alarm. The new equilibrium of forces in the Third Reich remains unstable. The basic issue involved in the Blomberg affair has, for the most part, been postponed rather than disposed of.

Versatile Van Loon

By Clifton Fadiman

Busy Historian.

TODAY, one of the most successful of American writers, Hendrick Van Loon works five times as hard as he did in his leaner—in either sense of the word—years; and enjoys it five times as much. He thinks nothing of a day at his desk starting at 7 o'clock in the morning and ending at 1 o'clock the following morning.

He has written 24 books, many of them gigantic, most of them illustrated by himself. Yet he has found time in the past to teach history, act as foreign correspondent, get a Ph. D. in the history of art, get blown up by a mine, become the father of two boys (one is a dancer, the other an architect and apple-grower), and devote much attention to Noodle, the sleepiest, deadest-panned dachshund I have ever seen.

Today he finds time to talk—he knows 10,000 anecdotes, not all of them printable, and will recount them at the drop of an eyelash; he finds time for radio addresses, lectures, playing the violin, helping dozens of persons, entertaining all sorts and conditions of men, bemoaning the state of the world and keeping up an enormous correspondence in several languages. (Cosmopolitan.)

Tom McCarthy

IT CAME as something of a shock, because I'd just finished threading my way across the jungle of tracks which spreads out from the New York avenue railroad roundhouse. And I'd been watching close-up, while the monster engines, their cabs a golden glare, shuttled back and forth across the yards leaving huge gobs of silver steam, hanging in the night air behind them.

McCARTHY.

And I'd been listening to the sounds in the yard; the occasional shouts, the crash of metal against metal and the dull roar of escaping steam. That's why it came as something of a shock, when they told me that I was just about 25 years too late—that the romance had just about gone out of railroading.

It may have been "Gas-Coal Jimmie" or "Porky" Dobson who made the statement, but in any event no one in the room (and there must have been a dozen engineers and firemen) objected. They told me that railroading wasn't like it was in the old days, even while three of them stood up to the oil stove and cooked up messes of scrambled eggs and bacon, on their own frying pans.

And "Gas-Coal Jimmie" grabbed for Carl Mills' tallow-pot and poured himself a cup of coffee, while the others settled down to one of the long tables and ate their suppers directly from the frying pan.

"It ain't what it was in the old days," one big fireman said, as he picked up a strip of bacon and eyed it appreciatively before downing it. "We got too many modern conveniences to have much romance left," he added as another guy turned down the flame in the oil stove and plopped onto the ancient wooden bench.

It developed that they didn't figure there was much romance in carrying coffee around in oil cans called "tallow pots," or in standing up to an oil stove cooking their own meals. Or even in firing an engine.

"It used to be so that you had to really throw the coal," Carl Mills, who is a fireman for the R. F. P., said. "Now, though, we just shovel it into a conveyor and it dumps itself. We got arrangements just as nice as some of these things people have in their cellar for the furnace."

"Yeah," "Gas-Coal Jimmie" said, "we don't get tired like we used to in the old days. We don't have the runs. Now, you take that 16-hour run I made as fireman during the war."

"Were you tired Jimmie?" somebody yelled.

"Gas-Coal Jimmie" didn't turn a hair. He just sat there in his blue overalls, penciling doodles across the newspaper tablecloth.

"Tired," he said majestically. "I was so tired that when I reached Wilmington, where I was going to lay over for eight hours, I grabbed the first place I could find for a nap. I wasn't particular. And I slept a good eight hours with my head on a water-cooler and my feet on a hornets' nest."

But, according to the boys, they don't get that tired anymore. Whereas in the old days railroaders left home on a Monday and stayed away for a week, most of them are now with their families every other day, or at the least every third day. And they don't have the long run anymore.

Many of the railroaders are now working as firemen, though for some years they had been engineers.

"A lot of us got demoted with the depression," one of them said. "Business slacked so on the roads that they didn't need all the engineers. Some of us went back to firing. When business gets good in rush seasons, though we take over the throttle."

• • • •

"ANOTHER thing we miss," said "Gas-Coal Jimmie," "are the shovel-cooked meals. Our runs are so much shorter that we don't have to rely so much on shovel-cooked meals."

"They always did taste swell," Carl Mills said.

By that time I was mildly curious, and I didn't know whether or not I was being kidded. I still don't know, but when "Gas-Coal Jimmie" told about the shovel-cooked meals it all sounded logical.

"You take your fireman's shovel," said Jimmie, with all the care of a chef divulging directions for his favorite recipe, "and wash it off with a hose. Then you hold it momentarily in front of the firedoor to let it dry.

"Being careful not to smear the blade with coal dust, you carefully grease it with a thin film of lard. As you may have noticed, there is a little hump in the middle of the shovel and that works very effectively in giving you a nicer looking dish. You break one egg and drop it gently on one side of the hump in the shovel. Then you carefully place another egg on the other side of the hump."

Everybody was nodding agreement and nobody smiled, so "Gas-Coal Jimmie" continued.

"As the crowning touch," he said, "you carefully lay a bit of steak or a couple of strips of bacon across the blade of the shovel. And then you carefully push your shovel through the firedoor and hold it there until it's done."

• • • •

"A MARVELOUS DISH," one old fireman said as he swabbed the last bits of egg from the bottom of his frying pan. "But there's only one trouble with that sort of thing, if you've got a mean engineer."

"What's that?" I asked.

"Well," he said, "it happened to me on a run out of New York. And the eggs were just about done to a turn when the engineer pulled the exhaust cord and my meal left the shovel and zipped out the smokestack."

"Did you get back at him?" one of the firemen wanted to know.

"Well, sir," the old fellow said, "I waited until he was drying his shirt in front of the firedoor. Then I pulled the exhaust and his shirt went up the smokestack."

But that kind of thing is out now, what with electric engines with nothing but oil-fed boilers and steam engines with coal conveyors.

The Business of It.

U. F. W. A. Local 15 (Veterans Administration) has discussed the proposed reduction in CAF 1 and 2 clerks for the coming fiscal year with A. D. Hiller, assistant administrator, and was assured that there would be no dismissals of permanent employes. The budget deficit would be met by not filling vacancies and by seperation of temporary employes. An attempt to secure employment for these latter workers will be made by the union's re-employment committee.

From a look in the legislative mill: The substitute for the so-called $1,200 minimum-wage bill for Federal employes, as prepared by the U. F. W. A., is churning satisfactorily . . . The substitute consists of a series of amendments to the classification act of 1923; is designed to effect the establishment of the minimum proposed in the original bill throughout the Federal service, and to bring up to the maximum the very lowest of the classification act salaries, which were left untouched by the Bulow bill (introduced last August) . . . The substitute also embodies the provisions of an automatic-increase bill that was introduced last year in the House by Representative Jennings Randolph . . .

About 25,000 regular employes who now recive less than $1,000 a year are brought within the terms of the bill by the substitutes, which makes the minimum salary provided in the bill apply to workers in grade 1 of the Custodial service (instead of beginning the revised scales with grade 2 of that service and grade 1 of the subprofessional service . . . It contains clauses providing for the addition to the salary rates of a 15 per cent differential for night work, and other differentials in the President's discretion, where special conditions render the standard rates inadequate, and a clause providing that deductions from the salary rates for quarters, subsistence and laundry shall be made only when the employes concerned actually use such services.

There were 889,550 employes in the Executive Branch during December, an increase of 68,279 since November . . . This was due to the hiring of temporary people during the Christmas mail rush . . . The increase in employment in the District of Columbia was 1,944 and outside the District 66,335, bringing the total number in the District to 114,120, and outside the District to 775,430.

A dance for the benefit of the District School Fund will be sponsored by the Bookbinders Union, Local No. 4, on Friday night in the National Press Club auditorium. The hours are 10 to 1; the music by the Mississippians, and the winners of a recent "trucking" contest will give an exhibition . . . A. F. G. E.'s President Stengle has received word from Secretary of Labor Perkins that she has included his name in the list of sponsors of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Labor Department, following his designation by Commissioner Hazen. The anniversary will be observed with appropriate exercises at the Department on March 4, and by a dinner on Thursday, March 3, at the Mayflower Hotel. Says Miss Perkins: "It is hoped that the dinner will bring together many of the friends of the department, both those who were identified with its establishment and those whose co-operation has been so largely responsible for its achievement through the years."

[This would seem an appropriate occasion for Bill Green and John L. Lewis to meet and shake hands.]

Do You Know Who Department: (The subject presented yesterday was Thomas M. Darnall, of the FCA legal department. Today we introduce a gentleman in the Procurement Division of Treasury, a person so universally popular that you may have guessed him already. He was born in Lynn, Mass., was graduated as a mechanical engineer from Cornell University in 1907 . . . He spent several years in Europe studing cathedrals . . . Was once an efficiency supervisor for Midwestern railroads . . . Just recently, he quit a high post in the A. F. G. E., to the regret, no doubt, of himself and undoubtedly to the regret of his associates . . . He is quiet voiced, but emphatic, is a good worker and a better friend to everyone who knows him. (The subject's identity will be given tomorrow.)

Add Interesting Statistics Department: That the number of game animals killed in 1936 by predators was approximately 121,000 deer, 1,000 antelope, 4,000 elk, 1,200 mountain goat, 760 bighorn and 16 moose . . . The estimated kill by hunters was 113,000 deer, 11,000 elk, 280 antelope, 400 mountain goat, 190 bighorn, 150 mose, 54,000 coyotes, 10,000 lynx, 2,700 mountain lion and 400 wolves . . . Which would show, to your surprise and ours, that the predator is much the greater foe to our wildlife than is the hunter. (The figures came from the Forest Service.)

Keen Rivalry: The popularity contest sponsored by N. F. F. E. Local 262 (Treasury) continues to excite them. The positions of leaders change almost daily. At last reports, Miss Flossie M. Bond and Share Firm Fights for 'Life' in Court

By the Associated Press.

Counsel for the Electric Bond & Share Co. and 26 subsidiaries argued before the Supreme Court yesterday the 1935 act regulating public utility holding companies "transcends all limits of proper regulation."

Beginning arguments on constitutionality of this Administration legislation, Thomas D. Thacher, former Federal District judge at New York, added the measure "usurps the functions of management and the prerogatives of ownership."

Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, and Benjamin V. Cohen, one of President Roosevelt's legal advisers, will defend the legislation today.

Two Liberals Absent.

John F. MacLane, New York attorney, will conclude for the utility companies.

A decision will be delivered by a seven-judge court. Justice Cardozo is ill and Justice Reed left the bench as soon as the argument began. He was connected with the litigation while Solicitor General.

Justice Black, who was chairman of the Senate lobby committee which conducted a widespread investigation of alleged activities of utility companies against passage of the act, listened attentively to Thacher's argument.

Thacher barely had begun a detailed history of the case when the court adjourned until noon today, when he will continue.

A variety of other cases also came before the court. These included an appeal by Alphonse Capone, Chicago gangster now in Alcatraz Prison, from a sentence of one year in the Cook County Jail, to begin when he completes his present term January 19, next year.

Counsel for two New York transit lines argued there was "hostile discrimination against the utility companies" in the laying of a 3 per cent excise tax to aid the unemployed of New York City.

The Federal Trade Commission appealed in an effort to continue an order directing the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. to "cease and desist" from selling tires to Sears, Roebuck Co. at net prices the commission claimed were lower than those accorded other purchasers.

"Misrepresentation" Charged.

The brief said a Government statement submitted to the court some time ago was "entirely superfluous" to the issues, and could have no "possible purpose or function except to endeavor * * * to create an atmosphere of prejudice" against the companies.

"Any fair valuation of the achievements of the defendants in the public service and in the development of the electric and gas industries, with due regard to their obligations to both security holders and the consumers served by their subsidiary companies, must concede that, on balance, they have served and not betrayed the public interest and the interest of investors and consumers," the brief declared.

Annapolis Urges Creek Deepening

By the Associated Press.

A delegation from Annapolis and Anne Arundel County, Md., urged the Board of Army Engineers yesterday to improve the entrance to Mill Creek in Anne Arundel County.

Nazi 'Sweep' Of Diplomatic Posts Expected

Army Purge Also Awaited as Hitler Confers With Ribbentrop.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Feb. 7.—Chancellor Adolf Hitler and his newly elevated foreign minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, are believed to be considering a clean sweep of the German diplomatic service to put Nazis of unquestioned loyalty at all pivotal posts.

This impression was gained from reliable foreign office circles as Von Ribbentrop was closeted today with Der Fuehrer at his mountain home at Berchtesgaden, in Bavaria.

Even Ulrich von Hassell, recalled Ambassador to Rome, is regarded as "too reactionary," these sources said, and consequently would not be sent to London as Von Ribbentrop's successor. Many had assumed he would get that post.

Army Purge Expected.

According to the best information available, a further purge of the army also will take place. The army changes will take the form of discharges like those of the 13 generals who were dismissed in Hitler's startling assumption of direct control Friday of the armed forces and the foreign office.

Of the army changes the new task assigned to Gen. Walter von Reichenau is assuming more and more interest.

His appointment to succeed Col. Gen. Werner von Fritsch as commander in chief seemed so certain last Friday it was disclosed unofficially by government sources to some foreign correspondents.

Nazi Eyes on Czechoslovakia.

Instead, he was placed in charge of the fourth army group with headquarters at Leipzig, but with jurisdiction also over Bavaria where he previously had commanded at Munich.

In view of the strained relations between Germany and Czechoslovakia and Germany's pronounced interest in the Nazi minority across the border, this ardent party man may be called upon to act very quickly in the event of untoword incidents at the frontier.

Rumors contniue to circulate about the arrest of some high officers during last week's cabinet crisis, although they are met with categorical official denials.

Posts for the Faithful.

It seems certain that for a brief period Von Fritsch, leader in the army demand for a showdown on party control of the army, was ordered not to leave his house. Since then he has been seen cleaning up his desk at the war ministry where his post was taken over by Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch.

Eberhard von Stohrer, now Ambassador to the Spanish insurgent regime will go to London according to the present plans. Count Freiderich Werner von der Schulenberg, Ambassador to Moscow, is to be moved to Japan. The Moscow post is to be left vacant.

Hans Frank, minister without portfolio and head of the academy for German law, is to go to Italy. Another devoted Nazi is slated for the difficult Vienna post. He is Lieut. Col. Hermann Kriebel, until recently consul general at Shanghai.

War Plans, Says Russia.

Moscow, Feb. 7 (AP).—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's reorganization of his Nazi government was characterized today by the newspaper Pravda as a move to speed "preparations for war which are being carried out not only along military but economic and diplomatic lines."

Making the first authoritative Soviet comment since the shakeup, the organ of the Communist party declared, "The appointment of military experts who are followers of Goering (Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering) to economic posts formerly occupied by Dr. H. Jalmar Schacht's officials have the purpose of speeding up preparations of German economy for a big war."

Associated Press Photos

These men were brought to the forefront as a further shakeup of the German military machine and diplomatic corps was indicated. Eberhard von Stohrer (left), now Ambassador to insurgent Spain, will go to London, according to present plans. Gen. Walter von Reichenau (right) has been placed in charge of the fourth army group with jurisdiction over Bavaria. An ardent party man, he will be in position to act quickly in the event of incidents on the Czechoslovakian frontier.

Reich Churchmen 'Quarantined' As Trial of Niemoeller Starts

who had no official business there.

Members of the Confessionalist "Provisional Cabinet" who are in Berlin were forbidden to leave the city while members in the provinces were prohibited from entering.

The move apparently was designed to prevent any gatherings and discussions of the trial of Niemoeller, who still is admired by millions of Germans for his World War heroism in which he refused to sink his U-boat at Scapa Flow in compliance with the demands of the allies.

Not only the judges but the small, Nazi-approved audience at today's opening session rose and "Heiled" Der Fuehrer in compliance with a new decree governing court procedure.

Today's short session was devoted to an outline of the limits of permissible testimony and it was indicated that the testimony would require about seven days, not necessarily consecutive.

No Appeal Possible.

If the pastor is convicted on the five charges of opposing the government's campaign to strip the church of its teaching powers and leave it merely a cult his sentence will be discretionary with the judges, based on the prosecutor's demands.

There are no minimums or maximums under law, but the seven months he has spent in prison probably would be taken into consideration.

There is no appeal from the court's finding.

The first charges taken up were the most important ones of the indictment—abuse of Niemoeller's pulpit to attack the state and incite-ment to disobedience of the Third Reich's laws.

As Niemoeller went on trial in a case which anti-Nazi Protestants compared with the persecution of Martin Luther in his appearance at the Diet of Worms, Fuehrer Adolf Hitler was at his Berchtesgaden Mountain retreat in Bavaria.

There, in isolation from the storm of speculation which his military and diplomatic shakeup of last Friday created, the now "supreme defense chief" planned with Nazi leaders a speech which he is to make to the Reichstag on Sunday, February 20.

While the Rev. Mr. Niemoeller hardly is a factor in the current army crisis, many of the older generals have expressed themselves as indignant at his arrest and long detention before trial.

One point on which this group of generals is reported insistent is that the neo-pagan philosophies of Dr. Alfred Rosenberg are undermining the morale of the army.

On Trial for Treason.

Niemoeller's trial is expected to settle whether opposition to the Nazi regime on spiritual and dogmatic grounds constitutes treason against the state.

Niemoeller, pastor of the Jesus Christus Luthern Church in the Berlin borough of Dahlem, was arrested July 1, 1937.

His first conflict with the Nazi regime was in May, 1933, when Hitler refused to accept the choice of the Protestant Church bodies as bishop of the Evangelical Church. An army chaplain of Hitler's acquaintance, the Rev. Ludwig Mueller, was appointed Reichsbishop by Der Fuehrer.

Pastor Niemoeller objected to this as state interference in spiritual matters and organized hundreds of pastors into an emergency federation.

Commander of the Army in Central China Calls All Aides to Account.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Feb. 7.—The commander in-chief of the Japanese army in central China ordered his subordinates today to halt the breaches of discipline which have been damaging the prestige of the imperial army.

Domei (Japanese news agency) described Gen. Iwane Matsui's action as "unprecedented in the annals of the Japanese army."

Reports of undisciplined action by Japanese troops followed the capture of Nanking, as well as other central China cities. The United States has protested attacks both on diplomatic officials and American property.

Prestige Endangered.

Domei said Gen. Matsui summoned his commanders together at Nanking and called their attention to the "recurring reports of breaches of discipline" by Japanese forces. He commanded them "to put an end to such things affecting the prestige of Japanese troops."

Among the subordinates who received Matsui's admonition was the head of a collateral branch of the imperial family, Lieut. Gen. Prince Yasuhiko Asaka, who led part of the expedition that conquered Nanking December 13.

Desperate Stand.

Meanwhile, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was reported to have taken direct command of Chinese forces making a desperate stand in North Central China to prevent the Japanese from taking the important Lunghai Railway.

Chinese advices said Chiang had arrived in the Tientsin-Pukow Railway zone, northwest of Nanking, and taken over the leadership of the two Chinese armies, one holding back the Japanese north of Suchow and the other blocking the invaders to the south.

Heavy fighting was reported going on along the Hwai River, 90 miles south of Suchow, where the Japanese made important gains last week. Chinese asserted, however, they had blocked Japanese efforts to cross the river.

Franco Poises 3 Crack Units For 'Victory Thrust' to Sea

Spanish Rebel Chieftain Hopes to Smash Way 75 Miles and Cut His Enemies in Half.

By the United Press.

Saragozza, Spain, Feb. 7.—Insurgents headquarters said tonight that three crack divisions, massed along the Alfambra River northeast of Teruel after a three-day battle that cost the loyalists 20,000 of their 60,000 troops, are awaiting the command to strike out toward the Mediterranean seacoast.

The insurgent advance lines are 4 miles east of the Teruel-Portalrubio highway, the enemy's chief line of communication to the north until its capture early today. The Mediterranean coast is 75 miles away over rugged terrain.

When and if that 75-mile stretch is conquered in what the insurgent high command regards as a "win the war" offensive, loyalist Spain will be cut in half, isolating Madrid and Valencia from Catalonia and the loyalist provisional capital at Barcelona and tightening the clamps of a "starvation siege" upon the two southern cities.

It was indicated that when Gen. Francisco Franco gives the command for the drive to the sea his objective will be Tortosa, along the curving Ebro River.

Volunteers "Spearhead."

Perpignan, France, Feb. 7 (AP).—A Canadian member of the George Washington Battalion fighting with government forces in the Spanish war today said at least 14 Americans in the battalion were killed last month resisting an insurgent counter-offensive on the Teruel front.

Sundsten Arvid, of Toronto, held in a local jail on a charge of violating a French expulsion order, criticized the Spanish government for using international volunteers "as the spearhead of attacks" with consequent heavy losses.

Stylish 'Miss X' Tells of Trapping British Arms Spy

London, Feb. 7 (AP).—A blonde "Miss X" helped unravel in Bow Street Court today the details of a three-year search for four men accused of stealing arms plans for a foreign power.

"Miss X," wearing a black two-piece ensemble and a smart halo hat, calmly faced the man who until 17 days ago thought she was his paid accomplice. She told the court how she sprang the trap on P. E. Glading, former employe at Woolwich Arsenal, and his companions.

The four were arrested after she telephoned the intelligence service January 21

Earth Too Quiet, Quakes to Come, Geodesist Warns

Since only 56 earthquakes were recorded on instruments throughout the world last year, an epidemic of temblors may be expected soon Capt. N. H. Heck, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, said yesterday. He explained the total of 56 quakes in 52 weeks makes "a very quiet" year.

"After such a period of quietness," he added, "it is generally possible to expect a renewal of activity."

Roosevelt Hails Boy Scouts' Fete

Congratulating the Boy Scouts of America on their twenty-eighth anniversary, President Roosevelt said last night American democracy would be safeguarded by youth movements. He addressed the Scouts in a radio talk.

"It is my conviction," he said, "that through work with our youth, we shall secure the steadfast assurance of maintaining our democracy in the face of those forces which advocate forms of government not consistent with our cherished American traditions. And the strength of this youth movement will develop in exact proportion to the support accorded it by communities which are interested in preserving our democracy.

"We should be especially thankful for a youth movement which seeks to preserve such simple fundamentals as physical strength, mental alertness and moral straightness—a movement to support the ideals of peace."

IN THE warehouses Mr. Pinnix has managed in Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, 46,000,000 pounds of tobacco have been sold. Farmers travel many miles to bring their crops to Mr. Pinnix's warehouse for sale. Reason is that they respect his tobacco experience and business integrity. So surely Mr. Pinnix's views are worth your respect, too.

"At every market I've ever attended," says Mr. Pinnix, "Lucky Strike has bought the ripest, mellowest tobacco offered. That's why I've smoked Luckies ever since I first became a warehouseman 20 years ago."

Mr. Pinnix's statement is borne out by sworn records which show that, among independent tobacco experts—auctioneers, buyers, and warehousemen—Luckies have over twice as many exclusive smokers as have all the other cigarettes combined.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

How can a business woman resist her married employer's romantic advances without jeopardizing her job or giving a forbidding impression of smug self-righteousness? The question was raised in this column on January 26 when an "Anxious Mother" asked how best to advise her married daughter, who, sorely needful of the contents of a regular pay envelope, is currently confronted with such a situation? On February 1, a young married woman told at length how she had dealt successfully a similar problem in her recent past. She described her employer as being as artfully wily and patient as a spider in fruitlessly tempting her. To this picture, a man lawyer took sharp exception on February 5, and today the lady spiritedly justifies her interpretation of the case while another reader chides both correspondents. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Please don't think I intend to use your column as a forum for publicly stating my personal views on various subjects, but if you will pardon one more letter, I should like to reply to "Man Who Knows," who in your column of February 5, gave me the benefit of his analytical prowess as a lawyer, thereby demonstrating his mastery of the fine art of molding facts to suit his purpose. No doubt, the gentleman is well-versed in the art of twisting evidence, and knows its effect on the feminine mind, as well as on the minds of jurors. It is well known that a smart lawyer can make a crook out to be an innocent man, and vice versa, if he is disposed to do so. At any rate, the gentleman's letter shows he has an intelligent mind, though his intelligence is not directed in the right channels in this instance.

It goes without saying that since the story I told covered a period of several years, all the details could not be narrated in the limited space of one letter, so in defense of myself I should like to add the following: As to being "hell bent on proving the stanchness of my virtue," I have never believed one needs to justify one's self for doing the decent thing, and surely the flat rejection of improper advances from a married man is not a censurable gesture, regardless of how the lawyer may feel about it.

Granted that the employer had acted most kindly toward his secretary, and that the secretary may have been a fool for accepting that kindness, it seems to me it was more to the employer's than the secretary's discredit that the former should eventually have attempted to take advantage of the situation, through tacitly demanding "pay" for his voluntary generosity. People in general are contemptuous of those who try to buy their way into the good graces of others, and when one not only tries to buy his way, but adds insult to the deal as well, I think the language necessary for describing such a man is alien to a lady's vocabulary.

The lawyer was right on some counts, and in admitting it I submit that I am disproving his statement that all women "lie like sixty." The husband is a well-meaning fellow; is not a good mixer; is not overly ambitious and the wife (whom our lawyer friend accuses of not loving her husband) has paid her own way during the entire period of their 10 years of marriage, in addition to assuming her husband's whole support for three years or more. In addition, she has paid him out of financial jams from time to time. If the lawyer will pardon my saying so, it is a little disconcerting to an ambitious woman to find herself tied to one totally lacking in gumption, no matter what other fine points he may possess.

* * * *

The boss was a man of great charm and personality, one of the "high pressure" boys of the business world, the sort who wins all the contests and collects all the profits. He couldn't have pleaded the "hard up" story, because everyone, from the office boy on up, knew differently. As a friend of his wife's, the secretary had further knowledge of his material well-being, so he could hardly have pulled such an ancient wheeze.

* * * *

Some women may yearn to suffer for sex, as our friend says, but I, personally, will take a little food and clothing first and the sex later, for I can't see anything beautiful about putting sex before the necessities of life. If either sex has this tendency to a marked degree, it's the men, not the women! Most men will stick to the woman who satisfies them sexually, no matter what villainous food she prepares for their stomachs, nor how badly she manages the finances, nor how careless she is of the appearance of their home. And men have been known to forsake wives who were perfect paragons of excellence in every aspect save sex, in order to chase after some little whippersnapper who hadn't a brain under her pretty hat, but plenty of that alluring item the wife had failed to provide.

* * * *

Now I have a perfect mental picture of our lawyer saying to himself "Ah, ha! Just as I thought. She's one of those frigid women who undoubtedly should see a psychiatrist and get straightened out on the subject of sex and it's all-important relation to the masculine scheme of things." To which I make reply that I've never lacked for men admirers, nor have I received any complaints from my husband . . . In conclusion, let me present a few facts which should refute with finality the lawyer's contentions about the boss' being a Santa Claus at heart.

* * * *

The boss may have read my previous letter. I wouldn't know. But if he did he could not act upon the lawyer's advice to throw me out of his office, for he, himself, has already been thrown out. And why? Because his great and generous heart also went out to another lady in distress, but one who didn't choose to forget the whole business and him as well, but who insisted, instead, that he divorce his wife and marry her, at which suggestion he faded out of the picture so quickly you couldn't see him for the dust. Not discouraged, however, the distressed lady, who felt she had been injured to the point of being entitled to reimbursement, took the matter to his wife and a few of his old friends as well, not to mention the manager of the office for which the boss worked. And, to make a long story short, the dear and kindly soul, with such bighearted intentions toward humanity at large, was, to put it bluntly, fired. Maybe our learned friend could make me out a vile, selfish, inconsiderate and designing woman in the eyes of a jury, but unless I miss my guess, so long as I retain my self-respect (which I still have) he and his kind will never have me in front of a jury.

ONE WHO KNOWS.

Says Few People Think.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The "Man Who Knows," in taking issue with the letter from a woman correspondent published in your column February 1, says "women only think they think." Yet I wonder if he dignifies his own very primitive prejudices and aversions, set forth in his dissertation of February 5, with the label of "thinking?"

My reaction to the self-righteous secretary who gave her melodramatic version of her employer's seductive overtures was the same as his. Most of us, women as well as men, dislike smugness; so there's nothing unique about his deductions in this case. I resent his sweeping statements discrediting the intellectual capabilities of women. Although all generalities are more hollow than not, I should say that the majority of persons just "think they think," and that this applies to "Man Who Knows" as well as to the next fellow. Incidentally, I enjoy your column, Mary Haworth, the only one of its kind I ever read, and I am sure you are a woman!

WOMAN OBERVER.

Nail Polishes, Too, Captured by That Watteau Vogue

Now we pick our nail polishes for charm instead of "flash." The Watteau influence is strong for spring, as seen in the new hats, flower trims, tiny flower boleros, and the prevalence of soft violet and pastel colorings. Polishes that give the hands a soft, fragile look, as well as sparkle, are in favor. Two new flower shades have been especially designed to create this fragile effect.

Heather is a lovely smoky rose, so softly colorful it makes the hands look white as silk. A faint hint of blue and just a trace of brown are used to tone down the rosy red. Result: A shade that goes with nearly everything—colors on the cool violet side of the palette, and browns and brown-reds on the warmer side. Heather is grand with blues and violets, lovely with moss and wedgewood green, the new "burnt wine."

Laurel is a soft beige-pink to wear with yellows and pastels, green, brown or amber, and for a soft suave effect with carnelian or with grey. Here's a polish to bring out the ivory tones of the skin. And it's the right "fragile shade" to go with the first golden suntan of those straying South.

Hat and Scarf Combine for Spring

HERE is a smart "double duty" hat designed by Lilly Dache, to give dash and verve to the midseason costume, and on into spring. The straw turban has a gossamer silk scarf trimming which continues on as a stock at the neckline, or may be tossed carelessly over the shoulders. Available in various color themes to harmonize with the dress it is to accompany.

When placing fresh paper on shelves and in drawers, measure the drawers and write the measurements on a gummed label. Then place the label in an inconspicuous place under the paper so that no preliminary measuring is necessary the next time the job is done.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Feb. 7.

NATIONAL Love Day falls like a cream-puff on Monday next, and it is high time that your personal spy reported briefly on the tender messages which will be sent by Him to You within the next few days, borne on the breezes of love and the United States Postoffice Department. The Hon. Jim Farley sprouts wings!

ALICE HUGHES.

Thoroughly surveying the Valentine situation as of 1938, I note at least two pretty distinct trends, and I believe them to be sympathetic of our confused era. They are, from left to right (1) simplicity, and (2) functionalism. Of course, the dear traditionalists will still smother their tender sentiments in masses of lace paper, and complicate their heart-pledges with pierced red hearts and undraped Cupids. Swains of a more modern and matter-of-fact type will rein in their deathless passion and go simple.

I have seen scores of Valentines which get across their messages without the traditional doo-hickies. Instead of horrible verse of the greeting card school, they merely bear the essential selling talk—"I Love You." After all, ladies, that's the hub and nubbin of the whole thing, and even if it is hand-printed on brown wrapping paper, it may prove as effective as the laciest Valentine ever made. "Will you be my Valentine?" is also a fair question, even though it may be purely rhetorical and superfluous. Love's love, whatever the medium!

I also note more practical protestations. There's a big satin heart which, if properly nudged, opens to display a mirror and powder compact. Others of the same ilk cleverly conceal a small jug of sweet-smelling fluid. As to the time-dishonored comics, they seem no better, no worse, than ever.

It seems to me that the girls of today are not impressd by a half-acre of paper lace. Far better, these days, is some such forthright avowal as "I love you, kid, and what are you going to do about it?" That tells it.

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A frozen courier on a pogo-stick bounces in from the Lower East Side to tell me that the No-More-Babies strike, led for months by the Hester Street Joan of Arc, Mrs. Yetta Rothman, is over! It was Yetta who led wives of that area to announce they would evolve no more children while the district was so filled with pre-revolution tenements, and who picketed the Town Hall with a banner reading, "Slums Make Bums." Now that our little mayor has demanded millions for new, modern housing for the East Side's thousands, Yetta has called off the strike—and the dusty go-carts of Delancey street will be tenanted again! . . .

* * * *

Judith Anderson, one of our finest stage stars, wasn't officially on the Berengaria at all when she bumped in through the ice the other day. I found her concealed under the name, Mrs. F. M. J. Lehman. There was a rumor that she was traveling third class, which seemed so silly I didn't even listen.

Speaking of actors, as one does under duress, I'm glad that the medicos at Johns Hopkins found Franchot Tone in tip-top physical condition. Saw him at "Golden Boy" the other night and he certainly looked as fit as a bass viol.

Hey! Wives of baldish gents! A famed Times Square drug shoppey is selling a lot of tincture of mullein leaves—confidently said to halt shedding hair, and even to stimulate new fuzz on pool-ball pates! It is said to be touted by no less a personage than George Jean Nathan, drama demolisher, who in his fifties still sports a heavy, graying thatch.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

WITH THE warm sun and balmy breezes to lure us to the beach, tennis court and golf course, summer has always produced its share of outdoor women. In the winter time it has been a great temptation to snuggle up to a fire and get our exercise by twirling a radio dial or flipping a magazine page.

But not this year! Turn on the radio and the voice of adventure beguiles us with news of the snow trails. Flip a magazine page, and what do we see? A snow queen vying with the bathing beauty in rotogravure! It is smart to be a winter sport, and the great majority who do not sally South for the winter are turning into a race of Vikings who skate and ski as if they had all been born in Norway where skates are as common as shoes.

Pays Off in Health.

This new snow cult is already paying its dividends in health and beauty. One efficient secretary, whose accurate shorthand is a marvel but whose looks never stopped a second glance, is getting known as the girl with the gorgeous figure, since she took up skating. I know a harassed mathematics teacher who, usually at this time of year, is about ready for a quiet sanitarium. But this winter she began spending her week-ends in the snow country and she is as radiantly healthy as one of her own high school freshmen. Hours on the ski runs have done their work and she is more than equal to her task of instilling math into the disinterested freshman mind.

There is a great difference in well-being as the result of the use to which we put energy. Sitting around by the fire lets the fat settle on those parts of the body you'd rather it wouldn't. You feel colder when you go out, more sluggish when you stay in, and by spring you'll be prime for the old reliable sulphur and molasses.

But why stay indoors? Cold is good for you when brisk action stirs up the circulation. In the large cities ski trains leave every week-end for nearby resorts, where you can master a new sport and share amusement and exercise with a jubilant crowd. For some of you opportunities for these recreations are practically in your back yard. You can always find a frozen pond.

Snow sports bring health and beauty.

Outdoor Play in the Cold Puts New Life in Tired Workers.

All you need is a pair of skates, and, at first, a little determination. You will soon enjoy yourself so much you will wonder why you haven't been skating for years.

Beware of Frostbite.

And here are a few hints that may be useful. Dress warmly and keep moving. Breathe deeply and you won't feel the cold so much. Be sure that your heavy shoes and woolen stockings are long enough so that your blood can circulate freely and carry warmth to your toes. Beware of frostbite at extreme temperatures and apply snow directly to the affected part at the first hint of freezing.

See you on the next hill!

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Best Type of Bedding.

SPEAKING OF whether it is advisable to sleep on the sleeping porch these winter nights or not, as we did yesterday, calls to mind a notice we saw recently that the United States patent office has just granted a patent to Michael Batick, of Cold Spring, N. Y., for an air-conditioned bed. A pipe full of small holes goes across the bottom of the bed on the same level with the sleeper. Through the pipe is pumped air which blows directly on the sleeper. This mechanical breather is presumed to condition the air for the sleeper. I have no doubt the reading of this paragraph will cause a great many to have cold chills go up and down their spines.

Depends on Choice.

The kind of bed that is healthiest, whether hard or soft, etc., is, like the question of the sleeping porch, a matter of choice. Most people, I believe, sleep better on a hard mattress. Although it is a general principle that for best rest the sleeper requires hardness, or resistance, where the weight and contours of the body need it most, on the contrary he requires softness and resiliency where the body pressures on the mattress are the least.

The principle of any inner spring mattresses at present, assumes that the head, the feet and the mid-section weigh substantially the same because the same counter pressure is provided throughout, which principle, says Dr. Norman D. Mattison, may in time be considered more old-fashioned than are hair mattresses today.

Professor's Idea.

Of the types of bed springs Dr. Donald Laird, of Colgate University, believes that the woven wire type or fabric type should not be used by anyone who weighs more than 40 pounds. He goes even farther to say that after one's first birthday, one should sleep on no spring but the coil type. The woven wire type does not conform to the body surface and quickly develops a permanent sag, a sag which cannot be removed by tautening at housecleaning time the way grandfather tautened the old rope bed. The coil type of bed spring has been proved to be the most comfortable.

Extensive requirements have been made in several psychological laboratories on the effects of sleep. Sound sleepers have been tested on all the different kinds of mattresses and springs, and the relatively hard mattress with the coil type of spring gives longer sleep and sounder sleep than any other type.

Inasmuch as we turn from side to back, to side, on an average of every 12 minutes during the night, the width of the bed is just as important as any other feature of it.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Man-Hunt.

LIFE ought to be getting easier and easier for men every day. Before long it should be a bed of roses. Especially if books on the technique of pleasing the male continue to be turned out at their present rate.

Most of these books have been written by women. But now a man, John Beeckman, has generously come forward and at the risk of being called a traitor to his sex, as he points out, has given women some inside information on how to get next to men. His book, "The Way to His Heart," published by Bobbs-Merrill, presents the answer to many of the questions that women have been speculating about at bridge parties and in office rest rooms.

Mr. Beeckman, thank heaven, does not go into cosmetics, clothes or exercises. None of these things, not even a good figure, is what a man means by "charm," he very comfortably states. Then he boldly assays a man's definition of feminine charm, which, boiled down, is the "successful use of intuition." Merely possessing intuition isn't enough, he says. It must be applied and it must be "civilized," that is, used subtly and under cover. Moreover, it works in offices quite as much as drawing rooms, he promises, in fact "it works at all times and everywhere."

'Man's Woman.'

Another moot question, "What is a man's woman?" is also answered by Mr. Beeckman. Such a woman, it seems, isn't at all the siren who at parties lures other women's husbands out to look at the Big Dipper. She is first of all a woman who "is willing to be diverted." This disposition, says the author, is founded on an attitude of benevolence, which he defines as "a genuine and generous fondness for one's fellow beings." You must never look bored or tired or unhappy at a party if you aspire to be a "man's woman," says Mr. Beeckman, but give the impression that you are generously disposed toward life—and especially toward any man who may happen to come your way.

But even that is not enough to make you a "man's woman." You must be able to apply this attitude in conversation and to be "assisting" in your thought to your men associates. This would include not being dogmatic or opinionated, not argumentative about serious matters (a little banter on light topics, however, is stimulating) and having a quick reaction to all their new ideas.

Finally, to be a successful "man's woman," you must possess the "conscious ability to be yourself." Discover what is "different" in yourself, advises Mr. Beeckman and don't imitate anyone else's uniqueness.

Sensitive Plants.

Having gotten that far you have no doubt been able to get a man interested or even "hog-tied." And now comes the question of handling him. Important in that technique is the avoidance of the "wrong moment." A man is a very sensitive plant, Mr. Beeckman points out, and here are some of the things that cause him to shrivel and dry up.

Any public show of imtimacy toward him, especially before other women.

Any discussion of his good and bad points in public.

Any attempt to dictate his social gestures, especially to suggest dining at a less expensive restaurant.

Failure to act as if you were hearing his favorite story for the first time instead of the seventeenth.

Affectionate or flirtatious gestures at the wrong time—breakfast, hangover, evening newspaper or when he is holding forth as an authority.

Types to Avoid.

Avoid questioning a man too much about anything, suggests Mr. Beeckman, especially about his past amours. Men like best to talk of the future and the big things they are going to do, he says, so if the urge for personal questions comes on, direct it along these lines.

Of course, being jealous or possessive is the quickest way to a jilt or a divorce, the author believes, and that applies to a man's work and his hobbies as well as his friends. If you think your husband is spending too much time at his golf or his stamp collecting, get an interest of your own, says Beeckman.

A very helpful appendix contains a list of "the types of men that won't do a woman any good." Included are the "sorrow hound" (he specializes on being sympathetic to unhappy women); the "man with a load of sorrow" (remember "a boy's best friend IS his mother, not you," warns the author); the confirmed bachelor (if he is not the precise, fussy type he may possibly be reclaimed); the man of a hundred potentials (he is always going to do something big next month); the "first sighter" (he may meet the grand passion of his life three times in one evening); the genius (who may or may not be one); the Narcissus (looking for admiration, not marriage), and the "man with the 100 per cent dishonorable intentions."

Mr. Thomas, Miss Burke Acclaimed at Musicale

Mrs. Roosevelt One of Distinguished Audience at Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's Last Musicale for This Season.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Polite applause punctuated most of the program at Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's last musical of the season yesterday morning at the Mayflower. But the thunder of clapping hands following John Charles Thomas' last number—the one about "David and Goliath"—was an ovation not surpassed at any musical morning this winter. Thus, the huge audience, heavily studded with social lights, indicated that a humorous song, in English, can bring down the house . . . even when half of the spectators are there as much to be seen as to hear the music.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Miss Hilda Burke, Metropolitan Opera soprano, who shared the program with Mr. Thomas, also scored her share of hits at the concert, and was—as someone expressed it—"easy on the eyes as well as the ears." Her powder-blue chiffon frock, fashioned with a full skirt and short puffed sleeves, was set off with a small dusty pink chiffon cap and gloves to match. A Marylander, who has many friends in Washington, Miss Burke said, at luncheon later, that being here was almost the same as being at home." Mr. Thomas, also a Marylander, felt somewhat the same way about it.

Yesterday's program carried the notice that Mrs. Townsend had decided to continue the Monday musicals and indicated the dates for next season's concerts, which will begin December 12.

In the distinguished audience was Mrs. Roosevelt, who arrived late, having held her press conference before she came. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was the guest of Mrs. Daniel C. Roper in her box. Among others glimpsed in the crowd were Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark in a mulberry tweed suit and a wide-brimmed felt hat to match; Countess van der Straten Ponthoz, Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre, Mrs. William A. Morgan, Miss Dorothy Tirrell, Mrs. John Herrick and scores of others who stayed on at the Mayflower for luncheon later.

Prochniks Are Ranking Guests

The Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik were ranking guests at Mrs. Townsend's luncheon at the Mayflower in compliment to the artists of the morning. Mrs. Ralph William Close and the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos, were also among her guests, as were Mrs. Millard E. Tydings and Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, Frank Keith Officer, Leander McCormick Goodhart, Mrs. Harold Sims, Ernst Ostermann von Roth and Nicholas G. Lely.

Also at the long table, decorated with ferns and centered with a big red heart, were Lady Lister Kaye, the Earl and Countess of Rosse, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Pell, Mr. and Mrs. William Phelps Eno, Mrs. Charles Wolcott, Mrs. William Powell, Dr. and James Alexander Lyon, Mme. van Kaathoven, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. John Charles Thomas, Miss Ruth Jones, Mrs. John Joslin, Miss Stellita Stapleton.

Others there were Sir Willmott Lewis, Robert Coe, William K. Ryan, Lynch Luquer, Ralph Snowden Hill, Waverly Taylor, Dennis H. H. Smith, Carroll Hollister and Howard Kubik—the last two were accompanists for yesterday's concert.

Mrs. Anthony Biddle Honored by Mrs. Lewis

Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, wife of the United States Ambassador to Poland, was guest of honor at the luncheon given by Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, wife of Senator Lewis, of Illinois.

Among Mrs. Lewis' other guests were the Marchioness of Sant'Orsola, who has just returned from a visit to Italy; Mrs. Laurence Houghteling, Mrs. Francis Whitten, Frau Hans Thomsen, wife of the counselor of the German Embassy; Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor and Mrs. Ballard Moore, of Chicago, who is the house guest of Mrs. Mark Bristol. Mrs. Moore, the former Olyve Graef, of Washington, was a great belle here in her debutante days.

Mrs. Daniel C. Roper was another who had luncheon guests following the concert. Her party included Senora de los Rios, wife of the Spanish Ambassador; Mrs. Michael MacWhite, wife of the Irish Minister; Mrs. Harry B. Hawes, Mrs. Joshua Evans and Mrs. B. B. Jones.

Princess Boncompagni had as her guests at luncheon Mrs. Chauncey Depew, Mrs. Henry Waite, Mrs. Sherman Miles, Clarence Hewes and George Otis Draper, the latter a brother of the hostess. Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose's company for the concert and a luncheon afterward were Mrs. George Dern, Mrs. Isaac Mann, Mrs. Matthew De Laney, Mrs. Arthur Tirrell and Mrs. J. J. Cochran.

Other luncheon hostesses included Mrs. Matthew John Whittall, Mrs. Charles O. Maas, Mrs. Charles Lea, Mrs. Charles J. Kappler, Mrs. Oscar Jarecki, Mrs. W. P. Tams, Mrs. Eugene Whitmore, Mrs. Wrisley Brown, Mrs. Chester Wells and Mrs. Henry J. Richardson.

E. H. Carrs Here Until Week-End

Prof. Edward Hallett Carr, of the University College of Wales, and Mrs. Carr, who are on a three-month visit to the United States, will remain in Washington until the end of the week, when they will leave for Minnesota.

They were guests of honor at a tea Sunday afternoon of Mr. and Mrs. Dorsey Hyde, jr., at the latter's home in Georgetown. Those who assisted were Mrs. F. Stuart Rice, Mrs. Solon J. Black and Mrs. Marcus W. Price.

Prof. Carr, who at one time was associated with the British Foreign Office, also worked under auspices of the Institute of International Education in Geneva.

Mrs. Roosevelt Stands Firm on Women's Rights

Proving her ability to hold her own in debate, Mrs. Roosevelt at her press conference yesterday stated her beliefs on women's rights and had an answer for every argument advanced by a reporter who took issue with her.

"I believe in equal rights for women, of course," said the First Lady, as she went on to explain that in jobs requiring more brains than brawn, "men and women should be considered on exactly the same basis regardless of sex." But for women in industrial work Mrs. Roosevelt strongly favors protective legislation.

Questioned closely on this point, Mrs. Roosevelt added that she had devoted a good deal of time and attention to the problem and had talked with informed persons on both sides of the question. "And I still favor protective legislation and shall continue to do so until some additional proof is produced that women in industry can get along better without it."

When the subject of minimum wages was introduced, discussion turned on whether tips should be considered part of a salary. Mrs. Roosevelt said she would like to see tips eliminated all over the country, or if they were given, they should be included in the bill and be turned over to a central fund.

Has Full Calendar For This Week

Reading from her little black book of engagements at the beginning of the conference, Mrs. Roosevelt listed a schedule as busy as any she has faced thus far this season.

Yesterday following the conference she hurried over to Mrs. Townsend's morning musicale. Yesterday afternoon she entertained at two teas, and later received wives of the General Contractors organization. Last evening a special group met at the White House.

This morning at 10 o'clock Mrs. Roosevelt will meet with the advisory committee of the National Youth Administration at the Willard Hotel. She will be guest of honor at a luncheon today given by Mrs. Henry A. Wallace in her apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel and this evening President and Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain at the last of their official dinners this season—for the Speaker and Mrs. William B. Bankhead.

Tomorrow Mrs. Roosevelt will have a luncheon at the White House. Later, she will receive Miss Margaret Illig for a conference, and at 4 o'clock, the advisory committee of the National Youth Administration will meet at the White House. The President will see them at 5 o'clock.

Thursday, Mrs. Roosevelt will be honor guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. Daniel C. Roper and shortly afterward she will leave for Philadelphia, where she is scheduled to speak. Friday, there will be another luncheon at the White House and that evening she and the President will dine with Vice President and Mrs. Garner.

To Attend Thrift Shop Ball

Saturday at 6:45 p. m. Mrs. Roosevelt will make a radio speech in connection with the Alliance for the Guidance of Rural Youth, and later that evening she will attend the Thrift Shop ball at the Sulgrave Club.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt, several members of the Cabinet and other persons interested in the Government arts' projects will be at the White House Sunday afternoon to see slides displayed in connection with decorative plans for Government buildings.

Mrs. Roosevelt will have her next conference Monday morning, and will be guest of honor at Mrs. Homer S. Cummings' luncheon the same day. While this program would seem to indicate the First Lady will have a heavy schedule through this month, she implied at the close of her conference that the end of this year's social season is already in sight for her. On the night of March 5, following the stunt party of the Women's National Press Club, she will leave on a lecture tour, to begin in Texas, take her through the Southwest and end on the West Coast.

Miss Jean Wallace, Student

Harris & Ewing.

While her father, the Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace ponders upon matters of farm and state, Miss Jean Wallace ponders over her books at the National Cathedral School where she is a student. This photograph of her, however, was taken at Mr. and Mrs. Wallace's apartment in the Wardman Park Hotel . . . possibly during that breathing spell that follows midterm exams.

Roberts Give Unusual Party

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert jr., both of whom have a flair for unusual parties, outdid themselves at the dinner they gave last evening at the Carlton in honor of Senator and Mrs. Alben Barkley, of Kentucky. The former is majority leader of the Senate and Mr. Robert, in addition to numerous other activities, is secretary of the Democratic National Committee.

Chief feature of the evening was an amateur dancing contest, at which the guests, even the most dignified, pranced about in variations of the shag, Suzie-Q, tango and rhumba. Prizes were awarded for best, next best and worst. Paradoxically, the finest prize was the "booby" award, others being jokes.

Reserve Rooms At Carlton

The hosts had taken several rooms on the first floor of the Carlton for the party. Supper was served at long tables set up in what is on other nights the Shar-Zad room of the hotel and after the meal the guests adjourned into the smaller room adjoining for coffee and liqueurs.

There were 60 dinner guests and more came afterward to watch the fun. On the arrival of the latter, everyone returned to the Shar-Zad room, where small tables had been set up, each marked with a card for a month of the year. Guests were asked to sit according to the month in which they were born.

Each table then selected a couple to enter the dancing contest and also chose a judge, so that there were 24 contestants and 12 judges.

A number of amusing and apropos speeches were made at presentation of the prizes. A loudspeaker had been installed for this feature of the program.

Mrs. Robert In White Moire

Blonde Mrs. Robert looked her loveliest in a gown of white moire with violet sash, matching shoes, and a corsage of violets. A beautiful tiara of diamonds and pearls completed her costume.

The guests read like a political and social "Who's Who." There were the newly appointed Justice of the Supreme Court and Mrs. Stanley Reed, Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, Senator and Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, Senator Joseph Guffey and Senator and Mrs. F. Ryan Duffey.

A center of attraction during the evening were the United States Ambassador to Poland and Mrs. Anthony Drexel Biddle, who recently arrived in Washington and are being widely entertained. Other "visiting firemen" included the former Undersecretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, who are stopping at the Mayflower.

Others present during the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Harold Walker, parents of Mrs. Robert; Stewart MacDonald, Federal housing administrator; Charles Michelson, Arthur Krock and Mr. and Mrs. Henri de Sibour.

Miss Antoinette Sainato Engaged to Mr. Calvert

The engagement of Miss Antoinette Sainato to Fred Calvert, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Calvert, of Macon, Ga., has been announced by the bride-elect's sister, Mrs. Mary Capone. No date has been set for the wedding.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

THE FEMININE CONTINGENT in Washington, which, alas, outnumbers the masculine to a staggering degree, will be delighted to learn another bachelor has arrived. He is Christopher Bramwell, newly appointed Second Secretary of the British Embassy.

Mr. Bramwell is young, comes to the Capital from the London foreign office, and at present is in the throes of house hunting.

Another unattached male recently to arrive in the Capital is Michael Straight, who also is from England Although his home is there, and he went to Oxford, he is an American and is in the economics division of the State Department. His father was the late Willard Straight, and he is a brother of the Whitney Straight who married a titled young Englishwoman in London a year or two ago. Washington's Mr. Straight is living at the 1718 H Street Club, bachelor refuge, where George T. Summerlin, Chief of Protocol, also makes his home.

MRS. JOHN FARR SIMMONS, who leaves February 28 for Ottawa, where Mr. Simmons has been appointed counselor of the legation, was guest of honor at an informal luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Merchant Mahoney. Mr. Mahoney, her husband, has just been promoted to the position of Commercial Counselor of the Canadian Legation after serving a number of years as First Secretary.

At this party we were impressed at the number of American State Department men who have married foreigners. Among guests were two who are studying for their citizenship papers: Mrs. Joseph Flack, an Austrian, and Mrs. John Hamlin, who is of Russian-French parentage and who lived all over the world before she married a diplomat. Mrs. Corby Fox, wife of another State Department official, who was also present yesterday, has a German-Argentine background, but is already a citizen of the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Fox, incidentally, are leaving next week for Mexico City.

Others at the luncheon were Miss Vera Bloom, Mrs. William Sturtevant, president of the Washington Junior League; Signora Bonardelli, whose husband is Immigration Counselor of the Italian Embassy, and Frau Herbert Blankenhorn, wife of the Second Secretary of the German Embassy.

Now that Mr. Simmons has left for his duties in Canada, Mrs. Simmons is staying with her mother, Mrs. Houston Thompson, at her apartment on Massachusetts avenue.

"DIPLOMATIC POUCH" is a romantic sounding phrase, which for some people conjures up pictures of all kinds of important state documents and secret letters. For the first time yesterday we learned how these imposing batches of mail are transported from foreign offices to embassies and legations in other countries. The procedure is about the same for most governments.

When a liner arrives in New York with a diplomatic pouch aboard, the consul general or one of his aides meets the boat and takes the mail in person to Washington. He then waits a day or two until the mail which the embassy or legation is sending home is ready, and carts that back to New York. He places it personally on the ship, in charge of some government official among the passengers who is to take charge of it during the voyage.

THE ENGLISH COLONY in Paris may feel timorously lukewarm about associating with the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, but there are enough others without qualms about entertaining them to make the Windsors' lives gay these days, according to reports from recent arrivals from France.

Baron Maurice de Rothschild recently entertained at a dinner for 70 in honor of the pair. The duchess was superlatively well dressed for the occasion in a dress of navy blue tulle with a wide band of ruby red paillettes placed in the middle of the skirt. With this she wore a new ruby and diamond pin and the tiara which the duke gave her shortly after they were married.

Despite the fact that her husband is a member of the staff of the British Embassy in Paris, American-born Lady Mendl has been most hospitable to the Windsors. They were honor guests at a dinner and reception she gave for a hundred and fifty people before her departure for India with Mrs. Somerset Maugham.

After an absence of six years from Washington, Mme. Grouitch, whose husband was for many years Serbian Minister here, has returned to the Capital. She came to be the guest of Mrs. Guy Despard Goff and is staying at the Sulgrave Club.

M. Grouitch came here before the World War to represent Serbia in Washington, and remained until his country became a part of what is now Yugoslavia. He then served as marshal of young King Peter's court and that of Prince Paul, the regent, whom he had known intimately for many years. Until his death last year he served as Minister to London.

Mme. Grouitch will be here a week or ten days before leaving to visit in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Buffalo. She will return in March for a longer visit.

Brilliant Audience Sees Katherine Dayton's Play

Diplomats and Government Officials Witness Drama Written by Former Washington Correspondent; Press Club Plans Tea for Her.

One of Washington's most brilliant audiences was on hand last night for the world premiere of "Save Me the Waltz," Katharine Dayton's new play, produced by Max Gordon with a distinguished cast. Scores of diplomats, Government officials, social notables and members of the Theater Guild and the American Theater Society came to see the play written by a woman who in former years spent much of her time in Washington.

More top hats and ermine wraps than have flocked to the National Theater for any opening play this season were in evidence last night, as long, sleek limousines bearing licenses from Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York pulled up to the curb and deposited load after load of notables.

Also in the audience were a number of members of the Women's National Press Club, an organization to which Miss Dayton has belonged for a number of years. One of the baskets of flowers presented to the author at the close of the play was sent by the Press Club.

Miss Dayton, who arrived in Washington yesterday, spent most of the afternoon attending to last-minute rehearsals. She will be guest of honor at a number of social events during her stay here, including the Women's National Press Club luncheon today at the Willard. Many Washington Residents who knew her back in the years when she spent much time here as a newspaper feature writer are showering her with invitations, and many others who know her only as the co-author of "First Lady" and the author of a series of articles on "Mrs. Democrat" and "Mrs. Republican," which ran in a national magazine a few years ago, hope to meet her while she is here.

Many Celebrities In the Audience

Among those attending the play last evening was George S. Kaufman, who wrote "First Lady" with Miss Dayton and who came down from New York purposely to attend the premiere. Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who is supposed to have been the inspiration for the leading role in "First Lady," was also present. Another person who almost stole the show was Tallulah Bankhead, whose husband, John Emery, is in the play.

Others glimpsed in the audience were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, Admiral and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Marvin McIntyre, Senator Pat Harrison, Col. Edwin Halsey, Marcus Heiman, of New York; Senator James Byrnes, Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom

Mrs. Roosevelt To Attend Play

Mrs. Roosevelt, who knows Miss Dayton well, plans to attend the play later in the week—probably tomorrow evening. Since the theme of the piece is one in which many persons are interested, it is expected that "Save Me the Waltz" will be a popular topic of interest here for some time.

Among those seen in the lobby discussing it between acts last evening were Mrs. McCook Knox, Mrs. Ernest Walker, Commander and Mrs. Atherton Macondray, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Abell, Mrs. Karl Corby, Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Copeland, Mrs. Knight Davies, Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, Miss Laura Harlan, the Minister of Albania, Faik Konitza; Mrs. Thomas Sim Lee, Mrs. John Marshall, Mrs. Isaac T. Mann, Mrs. Thomas H. C. Reed, Mrs. Edgar Boyd Kay, Miss Janet Fish and Frank R. Jelleff.

Others there were Senator and Mrs. Royal S. Copeland, Mrs. Bruce Barton, who arrived with Mrs. E. W. Pavenstedt, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and Mrs. William B. Bankhead, the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy and the Marchioness of Sant'Orsola, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock, the Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mrs. George Boncesco, both of whom are close friends of Miss Dayton; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Britten, Mrs. Harriman Russell, of New York, daughter of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman; Mrs. George Barnett, who arrived with her daughter, Mrs. Gordon Suydam, and Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, and many, many others.

Magazine Pictures Old Lindens Home

Persons who for some reason or other were not able to attend the de luxe housewarming receptions given by Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris last November for their transplanted home, the Lindens, may have the opportunity of rambling through the lovely old mansion simply by turning the pages of the February issue of "Antiyues," in which photograph upon photograph carry views of the unusual house.

The editorial in the magazine, after a brief resume of the historic house, built in 1754 in Danvers, Mass., and moved lock, stock and barrel over a 100 years later to Washington, makes special emphasis of the fact that, although Walter Mayo Macomber was entrusted with reconstruction of the Lindens, it was Mrs. Morris, herself, who painstakingly selected the furniture. Photographs include pictures of the lower hall, the first landing, the drawing room, the library and the dining room. Credit is given to Mr. Macomber for adapting the original proportions of the house to modern living.

All Activities Of Red Cross Dramatized

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The Red Cross program was presented last night in a dramatization of activities of the District Chapter given at the chapter house by volunteer workers. A distinguished audience attended, at the invitation of Miss Mabel T. Boardman, a preview of the entertainment which tonight will be open to the public.

Miss Boardman, in addition to her position as executive secretary of the national organization and director of its volunteer service, is chairman of volunteer work of the District chapter and active in its direction.

"The Red Cross in Action—in Peacetime" was the title of the pageant which was presented under the direction of F. Cowles Strickland, of the Civic Theater. The gray ladies, in the opening scene, were shown in the recreation of Walter Reed Hospital—with patients from Walter Reed participating as themselves.

Miss Emily Mackall, Mrs. Pilson Warren, Miss Grace Ocumpaugh, Mrs. John W. Joyes and Mrs. Louis Arthur were in the first scene. The next showed the recreation room of the Naval Hospital, where Mrs. R. H. Jeschke and Mrs. R. H. Armstrong were the gray lady visitors. The soldiers and sailors who took part were Robert Carmichael, James Butcher, Forrest Baugh, Guy Wally W. Denning and W. L. Moore.

Children of the Junior Red Cross played an important part in the pageant. Kenneth DeWitt, as the narrator, described their various activities, including repairing toys and furniture at the Christmas season, and Robert Hendon, James Haley, Marguerite Essinger, Eileen Mitchell, Rosemary and Patsy Dyer and Allan Rothballer were actors.

The staff assistance group appeared in a scene representing the entrance to the chapter building. News came to the office of a disaster in Haiti. The swift handling of the emergency call in this department was followed by a scene in the production department, with volunteers at work making clothing for the sufferers. There were cutting tables with machines which cut 30 pieces of material at once. In the staff assistance group were Mrs. William S. Masten, Miss Ruth Kent, Miss Helen Litz, Miss Helen Beattie and Mrs. Howard Boyd. The production department cast included Mrs. E. A. Roberts, Mrs. Anne Howell, Mrs. B. R. Johnson, Miss Caroline E. Thomson.

Mr. and Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, both of whom are Braille workers, explained the Braille service next in a dialogue. The Canteen Corps, represented by Miss Jane Jones, Miss Florence Erickson, Miss Laura DiZerega, Miss Lottie Tucker and Mrs. Lorene Yost, was discussed in the next scene.

Next came the health aides, who take through the hospitals a library on wheels, providing books for patients. The cast included Miss Margaret McNeale, Miss Dorothy Quinter, Miss Eilene Titus, Miss Helen Beattie, Miss Caroline Thomson, Mrs. H. P. Seaman and John Unmack as the patient.

Miss Helen Armstrong and Miss Gloria Rich were volunteers in the Home Service scene.

* * * *

The final scene was most dramatic of the pageant, illustrating the work of the motor corps and first aid service.

Mrs. H. R. Krinbill, head of the motor corps service, was among the members in this scene. Others taking part included Mrs. C. J. Henricks, John Unmack, Robert Duncan, Mrs. Carl Schmidt, Sidney Bishop, Mrs. L. B. Harris, Pat Davis, the boy, Mrs. Edward McCrahon and Gordon Stone.

Among the guests who attended were the Canadian Minister and Lady Marler, the Minister of Greece, Demetrios Sicilianos; the First Secretary of the German Embassy and Frau Tannenberg; Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Voters' League Loses Speakers

Representatives Starnes and Barton Both Miss Meeting.

Neither the Democratic donkey nor the Republican elephant had any "pull" yesterday in the matter of bringing speakers to the platform of the League of Republican Women at its meeting in the Mayflower.

The Republican women, demonstrating that Republicans and Democrats can join hands on patriotic issues, had turned out en masse to hear Representative Joe Starnes, of Alabama, discuss his immigration bill. At 2 o'clock his secretary called Mme. Cantacuzene, the league president, to say he was detained in an important session of the Military Affairs Committee and there was no possibility of his being able to speak. Representative Bruce Barton, Republican, of New York, who also was to have spoken, had sent word earlier that he too was tied up in a committee meeting on the hill with no prospect of being through in time to address the league.

The women were frankly disappointed but made plans to hear Representative Starnes when he speaks at a meeting at the Carlton, to be sponsored by the D. A. R. February 16. On the program with him will be John Trevor, of New York.

This meeting was announced by Mme. Cantacuzene, who explained that Representative Starnes' immigration bill on which he will talk, is one of two which have been introduced, the other giving discretionary powers to the Department of Labor.

The women also hope to hear Representative Barton at a banquet to be given in March at the Mayflower. Plans for the affair were discussed at the board meeting yesterday but no date was set. Other speakers to be invited are Senator H. Styles Bridges, Representative Ralph O. Brewster and Glenn Frank.

Mme. Cantacuzene also announced success of the information service established a month ago by the league for the purpose of acquainting voters, both Democrats and Republicans, with what is going on in Washington

Mrs. Charles A. Lea, chairman of the morning discussion groups, announced the next meeting for February 11.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

"A MAN who is a credit to his own country, and whose presence here is a sincere tribute to ours," was Dr. Irene A. Wright's introduction of the Spanish Ambassador, Senor Dr. Fernando de los Rios, to the international outlook section of the Twentieth Century Club at its meeting yesterday at the Y. W. C. A. Dr. Wright, now with National Archives, for 25 years lived in Spain, carrying on research work in history. She spoke of Dr. de los Rios as representing the type of citizen which the new government desires to have as its model.

The ambassador discussed the Spanish conflict as he did a few weeks ago before a meeting of the Faculty Women's Club of George Washington University, answering questions following his talk. With him was Senora de los Rios.

Also on the program was Mrs. W. F. Willoughby, just home from a visit in Mexico, who described her trip there and showed interesting examples of Mexican work she brought back.

Mrs. Ellery C. Stowell, chairman of the section following the program, entertained speakers and a small group of section members at a tea at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women.

C. branch of the league in a resolution, for her efforts in inaugurating the movement for preservation of Decatur House. Although the league seldom passes resolutions on matters not strictly within its own province, it made an exception in this one because of the importance it places on saving Decatur House as a shrine for future generations.

The meeting will open with a prayer by Mrs. Floran Bennett, president of the Sisterhood of the Ohev Sholom, and will conclude with the social hour.

Temple Sisters Hold Luncheon

200 Attend Celebration of the Organization's Thirty-Third Birthday.

Two hundred members of the Sisterhood of Eighth Street Temple were guests of the organization at a luncheon in the library of the temple in celebration of the sisterhood's thirty-third anniversary. It was founded by Mrs. Abram Simon, wife of Rabbi Simon of the temple, and also the founder of the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods.

Mrs. Simon, who recently returned from Chicago, where she was honored by the national federation at its silver jubilee celebration, was guest of honor yesterday and reported on the Chicago convention. Speaker of the occasion was the Rev. Dr. Solomon Goldman, of Chicago, who spoke on "Religious Education."

The importance of home training in any religious education was emphasized by Dr. Goldman, who pointed out that two or three hours in Sunday school were not sufficient to give children the spiritual background which would make their religion a force in their lives. He indicated that it would be worth while for mothers to renew their study of religious subjects in order better to support work of the Sunday school.

He was introduced by the Rev. Norman Gerstenfeld, assistant rabbi of the temple. A brief review of current events also was given by Dr. Abram Simon.

Mrs. David Simon presided in the absence of Mrs. Fredrik Pelzman, who is in Florida. She announced May 16 as the date of the annual donor luncheon to be held at the Shoreham Hotel under co-chairmanship of Mrs. Alvin Newmyer and Mrs. Gustave Ring.

Announcement also was made of a benefit program of motion pictures to aid the scholarship fund. It will be given the afternoon of February 22 at the temple by Mrs. Sidney Hechinger, who will show scenes she took in the West and in northern Europe last summer.

Hostesses included Mrs. Arthur Neuman, Mrs. Henry Ullman, Mrs. Burnett Baer and others on the committee were Mrs. Herbert Sommers, Mrs. Nat Aronson, Mrs. Abel Saks and Mrs. Alfred Dornblatt.

U. S. Crime Gravity Told To W.C.T.U.

Quarterly Convention of Union Is Held in Church Here.

It is essential that thinking people become aware of the seriousness of the crime situation and give their cooperation in meeting it, D. E. Balch, administrative assistant to J. Edgar Hoover in the Department of Justice, last night told members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Mr. Balch addressed the quarterly convention of the organization at the United Brethren Church.

Tracing the extent of crime in the United States, he asserted criminals, were they assembled in one area, would replace the population of ten States. Last year there was an increase of 7 per cent over 1936, and 20,000 of those arrested were between the ages of 16 and 17, he said.

The average person seems totally unaware that more than half of those arrested are "repeaters," who have been arrested before, some of them as many as 50 times, he said.

In an effort to meet the problem, we are now entering on a new era in law enforcement, said Mr. Balch. It has become a scientific profession with emphasis on better trained men and improved equipment. Qualifications for entering the profession require a man to be between 23 and 35 years of age; perfectly fit physically; graduate of an accredited law school, a trained accountant or have had a wide investigative experience.

The speaker described the intensive 14 weeks' course of training given at the National Police Academy here, designed to raise the standard of work carried on by police departments throughout the country.

Mr. Balch was introduced by Mrs. Ida W. Ramsey, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union for the District of Columbia, which includes 30 chapters.

The evening program opened with an organ recital by Mrs. Cornelia Kinsella, who also accompanied Paul Ledig, tenor, in a group of songs. There were two short plays, one, "The Cocktail Hours," given by the girls of Central Iota Sigma, and the other, an original skit by boys of the Stella Clayton Loyal Temperance Legion.

The afternoon was devoted to reports of the work of various departments and a discussion of national representation for the District, by two members of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Horace Phelps, chairman of the federation's committee on national representation, discussed points in favor of the measure and Mrs. E. Morgan Pryse, legislative chairman, presented arguments against it.

Mrs. Elizabeth L. Newburgh, chairman of the local committee on the W. C. T. U. million-dollar fund for temperance education, reported that during two and a half years of the five-year campaign half the sum has been raised.

Music in the afternoon included a song service led by Mrs. Rovilla Fry Atkinson, accompanied by Mrs. C. V. Burnside, and numbers by a vocal trio, including the Misses Helen Newman, Viola Sanders and Annabel Spangler.

A feature of the meeting was presentation of two memorial certificates of membership and three life memberships, all from North Star Union, of which Mrs. Marie N. Brinley is president. They were presented by Mrs. Ramsey, the memorial certificates in memory of Miss Bessie M. Israel and Mrs. Roberta Whaley. The life membership certificates went to Mrs. J. Edward Fowler, Mrs. Fannie Yeatman and Mrs. William Ellenberger.

Amateur Photographers Reveal Deplorable Slums in Capital

Potential Fire Hazards

Decadence Greets The Eye

This Friendly Circle Vanishes

Waits For Sir Galahads

By . . . HARLAN MILLER

Upstairs the White House offhand seems as remote from affairs of state as a suburban home is from its occupant's office . . . This impression is of course superficial, but pleasant and relaxing. One is reminded of comfortable, unpretentious homes in Boston, St. Louis, San Francisco, New Orleans.

* * * *

The long corridor, about 18 feet wide, lined with book shelves, chairs, pictures and ship models, pulls the 8 or 10 suites and bedrooms intimately together. All the doors open off it, including the President's oval study and the rest of his suite.

* * * *

At the raised end of this corridor are the cabinets housing the permanent movie equipment, which throws pictures on a screen lowered from near the ceiling near the other end of the corridor. In the central part of the hall the family and guests sit, often several times a week, in armchairs of an evening, for 70 or 80 minutes of cinema.

"——movies in the central hall"

Part of the raised hall, above the East room, is screened off as a sitting room . . . The furniture is comfortable and informal. (It's covered with what to a mere male looks like chintz slip covers.) Here the First Lady serves tea quite regularly, when she is in town, to the household group and guests.

* * * *

Mrs. Roosevelt occasionally uses two other rooms on the family floor to receive groups of women at tea, and sometimes she has three overlapping afternoon parties going on in one afternoon, placid and unhurried, by some personal miracle.

* * * *

There is a great deal of furniture about, much of it with historical associations, and here and there the profusion of things approaches, without quite reaching, museum proportions. The air is rather that of a family which has traveled much and has diverse cultural interests and hobbies.

* * * *

In the daytime most of the bedroom and other doors are open, sunlight streams into the hall, and except when Mrs. Roosevelt is receiving, or when the grandchildren are around, a serene and peaceful quietness prevails . . . Several hundred guests each year spend a night at the White House, which means from 5 or 6 p. m. until about 10 next morning.

Mrs. Roosevelt.

But when Mrs. Roosevelt goes into action, she does not spare the horses . . . One recent afternoon some 35 cameramen crowded (over the protests of some of the attendants) into her private sitting room to take the pictures of some 25 guests who didn't object the slightest bit to having their pictures taken there . . . But that was only an interlude in the prevalent calm.

* * * *

About 3,000 guests a year, official and unofficial, eat a meal or two at the White House each year . . . The general verdict is that the food is solid and nourishing, but far from fancy; no folderols.

* * * *

Genuine serenity, alas, has fled from the White House portals . . . But the vestiges of 100 years of White House serenity remain—the lingering flavor of the days when Calvin Coolidge found time to look in the ice box himself, or the Teddy Roosevelt children played hopscotch in the upper hall, or when President William Henry Harrison liked to go to market and return with a basket of food on his arm. These chromos have vanished with the horse and buggy.

Payment of First Unemployment Compensation Checks Bring Cheer

Post Staff Photos.

Georgetown Progressive Citizens Will Ask Senator Thomas for 'Adequate' D. C. Relief

Takoma Park Group Asks for More Strict Jury Rule.

Adequate relief appropriations for the District were demanded in a resolution adopted last night by the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown.

Recognizing that increased relief funds must come from Washington taxpayers, members named a committee to place their request before Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, chairman of the Senate District subcommittee on appropriations.

Extension of the fight against venereal disease was recommended in a resolution calling for a one-semester course in public health in junior and senior high schools.

The committee appointed to interview Senator Thomas includes Mrs. Elizabeth Sullivan, Mrs. W. Roach, Mrs. Donald Montgomery, and Miss Susan Craighill.

Takoma D. C. Citizens

Tightening of requirements to improve the caliber of juries in the District was recommended last night by the Citizens' Association of Takoma, D. C., at their second annual banquet in Trinity Episcopal Church.

They urged changes in jury procedure to make it more difficult for qualified persons to escape serving. They also favored appropriation for 31 additional policemen, and recommended immediate appointment of a prosecuting attorney to succeed Leslie C. Garnett.

The association opposed removal of any school facilities from control of the Board of Education. They objected to placing the administration of school custodians in the hands of the Commissioners; they opposed placing the school playgrounds under the supervision of a separate board, and they voted against reducing the salaries of school librarians to the level of public librarians.

Guest speaker was E. J. Price, of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, Department of Agriculture. Among the guests at the banquet were Senator Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota, and L. A. Carruthers, federation president.

Forest Hills Asociation

The Forest Hills Citizens Association indorsed a request of the Council of Social Agencies for more relief provided the total does not exceed that in the last budget.

Spurred by the death of a boy bicyclist at Brandywine street and Broad Branch road on Sunday, the association voted to ask the traffic director and the National Capital Parks Office to erect at the intersection warning signs reading "Boy Killed Here." A committee consisting of Col. Lawrence Crawford, Dr. Joseph Horgan and C. A. Burmeister was appointed to study conditions at the crossing.

The association approved putting school playgrounds under the jurisdiction of the Community Center Department and also approved increasing speed limits.

Kenilworth Citizens

The Kenilworth Citizens Association last night proposed that the price of fuel oil be fixed by the Public Utilities Commission.

They chose their president, Charles Maize, as head of the public utilities committee of the association, and authorized him to carry their recommendation before the commission.

The association indorsed action of the House District Committee in cutting the relief appropriation and the stand of the federation against using the old Tuberculosis Hospital as an annex to Gallinger.

Besides Maize, the following committee chairmen were named: Leck Baker, entertainment; Earl Dillon, laws and legislation; Paul J. Dallman, membership; I. D. Wiseman and W. A. Driggers, delegates to the Norteast Conference; William Webb, police and fire; Samuel Murphy, parking and planning; Dr. Z. King, public health; Mrs. Mabel Hubbel, publicity; K. C. Buker, schools and education; J. Brashears, sick; W. A. Barnes, streets and alleys; W. A. Driggers, safety; Mrs. John Petrie, welfare; Mrs. Alma Hudson, playgrounds, and Mrs. Dolly Fitzgerald, public schools.

Dupont Circle Citizens

A 2 per cent sales tax on all articles including food and drugs was recommended yesterday by the Dupont Circle Citizens Association.

The action came as indorsement of a report submitted by the executive committee to the association during its meeting in the Mayflower Hotel. More than 50 persons attended.

Their report urged abolition of the business privilege tax, and reduction of the tax on real estate to $1.50 per hundred. Exemptions for food and drugs, Woodson p. Houghton, president of the association, explained last night such exemptions would complicate administration of the sales tax.

They also recommended substitution of an income tax for the tax on intangible property.

The association adopted a resolution recommending that the blowing of automobile horns be outlawed between midnight and 7 a. m.

Woodridge Garden Club

Approximately 150 members and guests of the Woodridge Garden Club met last night at Sherwood Hall, Twenty-second street and Rhode Island avenue northeast. Supper was served by the Ladies' Aid of Sherwood Presbyterian Church, with music by Mrs. Leo A. Shinn, violinist, accompanied by Miss Marguerite Miller.

B. Y. Morrison, of the Department of Agriculture, was the principal speaker, his subject being "Landscaping a Small Place." Twenty-one new members were accepted.

Manor Park Citizens

The Manor Park Citizens Association voted to ask that Congress, at its next session, provide funds for four more classrooms, an auditorium and a gumnasium at Whittier School. The request will be sent to the Board of Education.

The association opposed a $5,000 item in the District bill providing for a power survey in the District. Grounds for the members' opposition to the survey were that present services here are satisfactory.

Also opposed by the Manor Park group was the transfer of Playgrounds Department funds to the Community Center Department. A bill providing for barber shop inspection was indorsed in principle.

Michigan Park Citizens

Officers were nominated last night by the Michigan Park Citizens Association. They will be elected at the next meeting. Committee reports occupied much of the time at the session.

Leech to Head $75,000 Drive For Boys Club

L. Gordon Leech, secretary of the Board of Managers of the Boys Club of Metropolitan Police, D. C., yesterday was elected director of the 1938 campaign to raise $75,000 for the club's activities, according to announcement by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police and founder and vice president of the club.

Maj. Brown said the drive will begin March 20 and end April 9. Each person contributing will become a supporting member of the club.

"We make only one appeal a year for contributions to maintain the splendid work of this organization," Maj. Brown declared. "The club, which is distinctly nonprofit in character, now has an active membership of nearly 10,000 boys throughout the city. It functions for immediate improvement of the living, social and recreational conditions of these youngsters."

Maj. Brown said the club activities have reduced juvenile delinquency here and have developed "a fine spirit of citizenship and a feeling of his brotherhood between boys and members of the police department." Starting with but one club on February 22, 1934, at No. 5 Police Precinct, the organization today operates five clubs and a summer camp at Scotland, Md.

Leech said campaign headquarters will be opened at Room 111 in the Willard Hotel in a few days.

D. C. Tax Bill, Doubly Loaded, Goes to Printer

Nichols Sure Realty Levy Will Be Cut, Income Provision Stricken.

A District tax bill that will give Washington taxpayers "something to shoot at" was sent to the Government Printing Office yesterday after undergoing a last-minute revision at the hands of the Nichols sub-committee of the House District Committee.

Carrying three proposed levies, which would raise more than twice the revenue needed to offset an anticipated deficit of $3,000,000 or less, the bill will undergo further rewriting before it reaches the full committee.

Although Chairman Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, believes that a realty tax rate of $1.60 will be ample, the sub-committee wrote in the current $1.75 levy, along with a 1 per cent income tax, and a graduated business privilege tax scale.

"I am confident that the realty tax rate will be cut to $1.60 before the sub-committe finishes with the bill," Nichols said.

He expressed similar confidence that the income tax provisions will be stricken on the ground that the extra revenue will not be needed.

Public hearings will begin the latter part of this week or the first of next, he said, and will be open "to all interested persons," but not necessarily to "all who want to be heard."

The question of the District deficit for the next fiscal year will be determined by the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations as it holds executive hearings on the House measure, beginning this morning.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, chairman of the sub-committee, said the inquiry will concentrate on the controversial items in the House bill.

Thomas predicted that the hearings will extend over a week or ten days.

First Unemployment Compensation Paid Out; Benefits Average About $10; Most Recipients to Pay Back Rent.

Ninety-six of Washington's 6,000 eligible unemployed received their first unemployment compensation check yesterday, and approximately 96 landlords are the happier as a result. An incomplete poll of the recipients indicated that the vast majority probably will apply the precious slips of paper to back rent.

"Sure I'm glad to get the money, but I need a lot more," said Robert L. Gragan, of 907 F street northeast, who worked in a brewery until last November. "I'm so far behind on my room and board that I'll be turning the whole $11.50 over to my landlady every week." His landlady, who listened in on the interview, appeared pleased.

According to Mrs. Howard O. Pritchard, of 665 F street northeast, she and her husband will pay double rent ($10) each week until they're caught up. But that still leaves them $1.50 to spend on groceries for 10-year-old Howard, jr., and Robert, aged 6. Pritchard has been a house painter with no houses to paint for three months.

Junior L. Ballard, of 624 H street northeast, an unemployed carpenter, agreed that he couldn't think of anything better to do with $15 check than pay up his rent. His money means a lot to him, because his wife has been sick for 14 years and his health isn't any too good.

Ballard received the second check distributed yesterday at the Unemployment Compensation Board's temporary office, 928 Fifth street northwest. The honor of getting the historic first check went to William Moses Adams, colored asphalt machine operator. He was given $14.50 and will receive a similar amount for the maximum period of 18 weeks unless he finds work meanwhile.

Director James A. Marshall, of the unemployment compensation board, handed out the first check himself. Also present for the ceremony was John Locher, president of the Building Trades Council, who represents labor on the board.

The maximum amount given was $15. The average was about $10. The sum varies according to the number of weeks the recipient worked last year and the wages he received.

About 150 checks will be ready today, Marshall said. In all, 6,000 are eligible for the benefit at present, but this number increases from day to day as more persons file claims. About 18,000 have applied so far, according to the board.

Most States with unemployment compensation laws started distribution of checks earlier. The District of Columbia jobless insurance act provides that payments can begin only after the third compensible week. The law has been effective since January 3, the date on which one had to file a claim in order to receive a check yesterday.

According to the Social Security Board, 160,747 individuals in 19 States have received benefits totaling $1,531,218 during the first week and a half of disbursement. Of this sum, $5,973 was distributed to 791 Virginia residents.

Delay Scored In Unifying Playgrounds

Council Opposes Move to Transfer Funds to School Budget.

Failure of a special committee—appointed by the President—to develop long-pending plans for coordination of District recreational facilities was attacked yesterday by the City-wide Playground Council.

The council, composed of representatives from 60 civic, welfare and parent-teacher groups, described as "unfortunate" current legislative efforts to transfer funds from the Playground Department to the public school budget for the operation of summer playgrounds.

Contending any change in the present setup would defer establishment of a consolidated recreational system, the council questioned activities of a three-man committee appointed in 1935 to draft coordination plans.

"The council is unable to understand," said a statement signed by Julian C. Hammack, president of the group, "why this committee appointed to survey the recreational system of the District over two years ago has not been able to give the citizens of the District the benefit of a report and recommendations."

The special committee, headed by Frederic A. Delano, National Capital Park and Planning official, includes Commissioner George E. Allen, Henry I. Quinn, of the Board of Education, and C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks.

Lewis Barrett, secretary to the committee, said yesterday a report has been withheld because members of the group "failed to agree on a program of administration."

At the same time, Delano said a report had been submitted to the House Appropriations Committee, but it wasn't accepted. This report, he said, was based on information from the National Recreation Association of America.

"There has been no formal report," said Delano, "but we are operating tentatively under the information we submitted to Congress. We have been sitting around a table in frequent discussions and our work will continue."

Quinn said he had "heard of no report" and as far as he knew nothing had been done because of disagreements.

Pending legislation would transfer $29,000 from the Playground Department to the Community Center of the Public Schools.

This shift in funds, said the Playground Council, will curtail playground activities in the summer and the program of health and physical education during school terms.

School Is Crowded By Feeble-Minded

Population of the District Training School for Feeble-Minded at Laurel, Md., has reached an all-time high of 557, Superintendent James Lewald reported yesterday to the Board of Public Welfare.

To Elwood Street, director of the welfare board, Dr. Lewald pointed out that the new hospital building, which will be completed this year, "will give us very little relief from this, as we will have to retain some vacant beds for acute cases."

Inmates who helped grade the ground for the new hospital have saved the District approximately $5,000, Dr. Lewald stated.

The decoration, highest the Polish government can bestow, was awarded for Dr. Wang's "outstanding services promoting Chinese and Polish friendship while he was chinese foreign minister."

It was a humorously conceived, but maladroitly written play that was revealed to a fashionable and receptive audience in the National Theater last night when Max Gordon offered Katharine Dayton's new comedy of "Save Me the Waltz" for the first time on any stage.

Founded on a brilliantly satiric idea of a dictator who tires of his God-like masquerade when he falls in love with a royal princess, and a king who tires of his regal prerogatives when the throne again is proffered him, "Save Me the Waltz" has in its content the making of a delightful evening in the theater.

There is so much richness in the production, so much sound talent in the cast and so much potential drama in the conflict of characters that are, in the main, deftly drawn, engaging and "in the news" that one rather expects a hit to evolve from last night's revelation of a play that ran some 40 minutes beyond its appointed time.

In fashioning her successor to "First Lady," Miss Dayton has concentrated on brittle and consistently amusing dialogue, and has slighted the equally esential factor of dramatic movement, suspense and the climactic "punches" necessary to lend her work homogeneity, swift pace and the vigor inherent in its substance. As presented last evening—under the usual handicaps imposed by every premiere—it was a talky play; a play that was literate, original and provocative, but frequently impeded by the very wealth of its verbiage until it became almost static.

Has Fresh Viewpoint.

The comedy is patterned along lines that afford fresh points of approach to the current submergence of placid kings under the fictitious greatness of fiery dictators. Its king is a delightful person; its dictator scarcely less charming once he is stripped of the counterfeit greatness he has assumed and disclosed as the simple peasant that he is. The queen is a splendidly etched symbol of the feminine lust for social eminence and the prestige of a house centuries old; the prince and princess, charming young people with family tradition deeply ingrained in their natures and a primary concern about falling genuinely in love and marrying mates of their own mature choice rather than consorts chosen for them by royal parents in their cradle days. Here, surely, is the foundation of highly diverting satirical comedy that may be imbued with dramatic virtues beyond those of merely crisp and enlivening conversation.

The three acts, as they stand, are heavily punctuated with mots that create many periods of sustained laughter. There are, on the contrary, surprisingly few situations of which the same may be said. Miss Dayton, in her first draft, has written a reading, not an acting piece.

Droll King; Ambitious Queen.

There is a homely and intensely human quality to be found in a once-ruling household which has as its king an earthy little man who discovers considerably to his own chagrin that he much prefers the cattle on his dairy farm and a Sears Roebuck catalogue to the dignitaries of his court and papers of state. There is a tiny tug, too, in the spectacle of a queen who has contrived valuable beauty secrets, but is willing to sacrifice them to "The State" to regain the imperial palace of her ancestors. Their children in outlook and natural inclinations might be any two young Americans instead of heirs to the throne of Jadlovia. The dictator is just a big combative boy at heart, who knows his own limitations better than any of his subjects, the only difference between him and them being that he has a little more iron in his blood and thunder in his voice.

Something ought to come out of all this before the week is over. Something probably will.

Last night's presentation of the play was heroically buoyed by several exceedingly fine performances by members of a carefully chosen and competent company of players.

Cast Excels.

Leo G. Carroll, as H. R. H. King Frederick IV, performed with a subtle and sure sense of humor that gave as part a luster out of all proportion to the measure of effort he seemed to bestow upon it. Mady Christians, as his queen, was both regal and reliable in all of the important scenes of the three acts. John Emery's dictator could hardly have been improved upon, what with his fine flair for mock heroics, impressive voice and romantic susceptibility to the irresistible charm of Jane Wyatt in the role of the princess. The love scene between these two was the best played scene in the three acts and stamped each as an artist among the younger practitioners of the theater.

Laura Hope Crews, distinguished veteran of both stage and screen, was a fountainhead of sparkling speech throughout the evening, but encountered nothing to place any heavy demands upon her brilliant capabilities as an actress equal to any interpretative imposts placed upon her.

Brenda Forbes, Reginald Bach, Leslie Barrie, Martha Sleeper and Arnold Korff are among others who contributed generously to the audience impulse that resulted in six curtain calls following the late final curtain. Tallulah Bankhead, in private life Mrs. John Emery; her father, the Speaker of the House; the Attorney General and others of note were included among those who participated in this enthusiasm.

Technicolor Feature Strikes New Note in Screen Entertainment; the Postman Continues to Ring Twice; Charlie Grapewin Announces Retirement From Films; Fazenda Stars in 'Swing Your Lady;' Notes.

IT WOULD be a comforting thing if in three or four decades of stringing words together for the annoyance of the reading public, a fellow never had used an adjective or a superlative.

In that case they all could be called into play in extollation of Walt Disney's first Technicolor, feature-length production, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." Devoted, en toto, to this amazing subject they still would hardly do it justice.

BELL.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," unspooled yesterday afternoon before a projection roomful of increasingly fascinated spectators, established itself as perhaps the greatest bit of screen entertainment that ever has been released.

This, of course, is only reiteration of appraisals that have filtered into the Capital from other cities in which this marvelously executed elaboration of the cartoon form already has been publicly presented. Reiteration, at the moment, seems to be all that can be done about it.

Here is the perfect co-ordination of action, speech and music, more perfectly synchronized than in any comparable production enlisting the services of living actors. To the perfection of a bewildering technical accomplishment has been added one of Technicolor's finest demonstrations of the true value of natural-color photography to the screen.

With that incomparable command of humorous effect that has characterized all of his product since the day of the fabulous "Three Little Pigs," Disney, in "Snow White," has combined dramatic and pictorial elements that could not be obtained in any other manner than by the genius of his own creative gifts and the sympathetic co-operative skill of a vast army of subordinate craftsmen.

There is nothing in the annals of the cinema with which "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" can be compared. It is the first of its kind—unique, thrilling and magnificently entertaining.

It is inexplicable that British censors should have decreed that "Snow White" may not be viewed in the empire by anyone under 16 years of age, on the theory that they might be frightened by the sinister implications of a Grimm fairy tale that has been a classic of countless generations. This, in the inconsequential estimate of this observer, is a new low in censorial stupidity.

The slightly ecstatic state of mind in which one is left by a first viewing of Mr. Disney's first major feature precludes any rational preview compendium of thought as to the manifold factors that enter into the composition of a miraculous piece of work. Perhaps by Saturday something of the picture's irresistible hypnosis will have been shaken off—but I doubt it.

It is the one screen exhibit in recent years that has inspired me to hope that I will be able to see it many times more.

* * * *

Despite the disinclination to attempt a detailed resume of "Snow White" while its bedazzlement still is so strong, the temptation cannot be resisted to point out that it is a daring bit of dramaturgy that makes a comedian out of a bluebird and an adventurer out of a very young and vary small bunny. I suggest that you await the "entrance" of these youngsters as among the most effective "characters" in the play. And that turtle is some fellow, too. But this rhapsody could go on forever, if there were not a period on our typewriter. That last dot was the period. However, I warn you to beware of Saturday's paper!

* * * *

In a letter from the Mayfair House, New York, in addition to many kindly remarks of a personal and, I am afraid, flattering nature, Fredric March had this to say when he took his typewriter on his knee Sunday.

"We did so enjoy meeting you and are deeply grateful for the excellent care you took of us in our hectic wanderings. Naturally, we were plesed, too, by your extremely kind references to us in your column.

"Our plans at the moment include the possibility of a short Bermuda trip in which to finish up this business of recuperating, and then another crack at the theater this spring which we hope may land us in Washington for a few days, or a full week."

Mr. March's closing hope is one which I am sure is enthusiastically shared by every theatergoer in the National Capital. The "we's" and the "us's," as goes without saying, refer to Mr. March and his charming wife, known to the stage as Florence Eldridge. They are charming and gracious people to have around, whether in the theater or out. That is why I am in favor of a "full week" instead of the discouraging "few days." Why not make it two weeks?

* * * *

And there is another letter from Burbank, Calif., which Jack Warner, in charge of production of Warner Brothers and First National Pictures, took the trouble to write under date of a day late in January, in which he expresses the thanks of Hal Wallis, his associate, and in private life the husband of Louise Fazenda, one of the visitors for the President's birthday celebration; Henry Blanke, producer; Paul Muni and "all the men and women who had a hand in making 'The Life of Emile Zola,'" pronounced by a national concensus of critics the "best picture of the year" in the Film Daily poll. I happened to be in on that. Thoughtful of these nice people to bother. As someone else before me has said, "the bigger they are, the bigger they are."

* * * *

After nearly half a century of work on the stage and screen, Charlie Grapewin, veteran character actor, has retired from public life to devote his time to the authorship of three books he is articled to write.

The announcement was made on the set at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer upon the completion of "Of Human Hearts," opening Friday at Loew's Capitol, in which he is featured with Walter Huston, Beulah Bondi and James Stewart. "I am committed to write three novels," Grapewin said, "and if I continue in pictures I will have no time for this work."

This time, he says, his retirement is permanent. He "retired" seven years ago to join the late Cliff Durant in an executive position with General Motors, but was persuaded to return to pictures to play in "The Bad Penny."

About the book-writing business, Charlie already has "The Sqawk," "The Bronze Bull" and other works to his credit. He also wrote all of the acts in which he and his wife, Anna Chance, long retired from the boards, played in vaudeville and then did the full-length play, "The Awakening of Mr. Pipp," which made him a star on Broadway.

In my memory, Charie Grapewin and Ana Chance date back to the days of The Four Cohans, The Four Mortons, McIntyre and Heath, Ezra Kendall, Jim and Bonnie Thornton, Clarice Vance, the original "coon-shouter;" Cressy and Dayne and all of those other old-timers of the two-a-day out in Chicago at about the turn of the century.

It will seem strange not to have Charlie around any more on the public rostrums.

* * * *

Since Louise Fazenda has been much in Washington's eye of late, and already has been mentioned in these dispatches, it might be well to offer the reminder that her latest strarring picture, "Swing Your Lady," will be the screen feature at the Earle, beginning Friday. The Weaver Brothers and Elviry are in it with her. That is recommendation enough, even without mention of Nat Pendleton.

In Dayton Comedy at National

more familiar to gazers at motion picture screens than to patrons of the living theater, who this week appears in an important role in the Max Gordon-Sam H. Harris production of Katharine Dayton's comedy of "Save Me the Waltz," being given its first performances on any stage in the National Theater this week.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Feb. 7.—Last night, I took a postman's holiday and went to our neighborhood theater to see a picture. And I think I would have enjoyed the show, if my disposition had not been curdled by the barrage of advertising matter thrown on the screen. For 20 minutes I had to sit there and see flashes from "Coming Attractions," broken up by flamboyant superlatives, hailing each one of those announced pictures as the "most colossal, most stupendous, most soul-stirring" epic ever screened. And I had not paid my money at the box office to have such hooey crammed down my gullet.

When will Hollywood's producers learn that all of the four syllable superlatives in the dictionary fail to remove the smell from a bad picture—and when will they realize that to shower such praise on run-of-the-mill trash merely cheapens their occasional good pictures? They remind me of the boy who cried "wolf"—and unless they tone down their advertising John and Jane Public are very apt to follow the example of the herders who refused to be fooled by the boy's cries for help.

In a town where most girls of fifteen or sixteen consider themselves sophisticated women of the world Olympe Bradna's status is an anomaly. At seventeen she lives a life as closely guarded as that of a novice in a convent. She has no "dates," she never goes to a simple movie theater unchaperoned, she has never seen the inside of a night club. Papa and Mama Bradna, setting themselves up as modern version of Scylla and Charybdis, accompany her wherever she goes and look with frowning disfavor on any mere male bold enough to cast a smile in Olympe's direction. Hollywood, in general is amused by such defiance of the American scheme; Olympe's sentiments are only known to Olympe, but there is no mistaking the attitude of the young men who would be her admirers—they do not like Papa and Mama Bradna.

Alex Kahle, a mild-mannered, middle-aged German, is a still photographer at Twentieth Century-Fox. He is also a Hollywood celebrity. Several years ago, Will Rogers—whose sense of humor was matched by the stubbornness with which he refused to be "still" photographed—played a joke on Kahle by secretly removing the film from his plate holders. When Kahle discovered the trick, he went to Rogers and said: "Mr. Rogers, you think that was a fine joke. If I had a million dollars and a job that was paying me a fortune every year, I might think so too. But since I'm just a poor cameraman, whose living depends upon the ability to take good pictures every day, I fail to see the humor." And from that day on, Bill Rogers—who refused all other cameramen—let Kahle photograph him whenever he wanted to. And Alex Kahle became one of Rogers' best friends.

Set-visited with a still indignant Kay Francis today. Seems that last Sunday, with most of her servants given their liberty for the day, her doorbell started to ring. Party after party announced themselves as prospective buyers of her new home—she has just moved in—and demanded the right to inspect the property. And all of them left in a huff when Kay refused to let them in. After four or five such visitations, Kay caught on, searched her front yard, and found the cause of all her trouble. Some practical joker—and she would like to know who had planted a "For Sale—Open for Inspection" sign in her front yard.

What constitutes the perfect girl of 1938?

Is she short? Is she tall? Is she thin? Is she plump? Does she weigh 112 or 125? Is she a perfect 36? Has she a boyish figure or is she a living replica of Venus de Milo?

Pete Smith, who is making a new picture called "Modeling for Money," is trying to find her.

Because beauty statistics change almost with the seasons, Pete is taking no chances. He is soliciting the opinions of international artists and will be guided accordingly. When the vote is in and counted, Smith will start an intensive search for the girl to play the heroine in "Modeling for Money," which is a story of professional dress models, showing how they are schooled and the natural obstacles of carriage and physical defects they must overcome to be accepted as mannequins.

Moore's First Star Film Rolls at RKO

With Victor Moore, rotund little funster, in his first screen starring role, "It Can't Happen Again," has just gone before cameras at RKO-Radio. Allan Lane and Vicki Lester will play the romantic leads.

Busy Actress.

'Myrna Loy Blue' Latest for Autos

Dolly Tree, designer, is the only person in the world to have a car painted in a shade known as Myrna Loy Blue.

Miss Tree, who together with Myrna Loy originated this new shade, was so fond of the soft violet tone of the color, that she took a sample of the fabric and ordered her new car painted to match.

It took exactly one week for enamel experts to duplicate the tone in auto paint.

4,000 Props.

The Post's New Yorker

BECAUSE OF some governmental mix-up, the Conowingo Dam in Maryland is insured against fire! . . . Nathan Straus, the Federal Housing Commissioner, is arranging with Grover Whalen to have the Federal Theater's housing play, "One-third of a Nation," established as a permanent exhibit at the New York World's Fair . . . All the walls at the RKO offices here now are placarded with pep-up posters for the employes, reading: "Have You Reinoculated Yourself Today?" But the employes don't look reinoculated—because 15 were fired in the clean-up, within the past 10 days. The Hat, Cap and Milliners Union will ape the I. L. G. W. U.'s "Pins and Needles," with a revue in which only the union members will participate. It will be called "In Your Hat."

As a result of this decision, all the out-of-New York places which style themselves La Conga, Stork Club, Lindy's, Sardi's, etc., will be forced to seek other names . . . Harry L. Irwin Shaw, author of "Bury the Dead" and "Siege," is writing a new radio series for Orson Welles . . . Contrary to the syndicated reports from Hollywood this week, Paulette Goddard was not signed to play Scarlett O'Hara. New Scarletts still are being tested at the Astoria studios here. The newest one is a young lady named Archer Ankerson—a Swede!

IN THE Guy Lombardo-Phil Regan-Pete Reilly melee at Dave's Blue Room, a Britisher found himself underneath the group, on the floor. After the celebrities had shaken hands, the Britisher called the bartender, and declared: "I demahnd an apology forthwith" . . . "This isn't the time," he was told . . . "But I demahnd it—now," he insisted . . . "Shut up," the bartender warned, "or I'll bat your brains out" . . . "Quite right, quite right," the Londoner corrected. "This isn't the time for apologies."

PAUL MELTSNER, the noted artist, who didn't have enough money to hang the murals he painted for Bellevue, Ohio, finally raised the necessary money. He has a portable night club, which will tour the country, playing at ball parks. It features 36 girls and two orchestras. The opening will be in Hollywod, April 23. Ned Alvord is advance man . . . Lou Holtz opens at the Chez Paree Friday . . . Bob Benchley completed three shorts this week: "How to Make Out Your Income Tax Report," "An Evening Alone" and "How to Appreciate Music . . . THE NATIONAL EXTERMINATORS Society, convening here, tried to get tickets to "Of Mice and Men," was unsuccessful, and so decided upon "Brother Rat" . . . When Jed Harris first saw the longhand-manuscript of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town," which fascinated the first-night audience last night, he tore the completed pages out of Wilder's note book, rushed back to America, and instructed Wilder to send the rest by mail. . . One of the delegates at Geneva reported to his country: "Mussolini can't think of anything to say below a shout."

Morris Is Champ Of Hitch-Hikers

Wayne Morris, who had never been on a train until recently, when he returned from a motion picture location, claims he is Hollywood's champion hitch-hiker.

"I've thumbed my way from Los Angeles to Reno and back," he says, "and from Los Angeles to nearly every good sized town in California too. I thumbed my way around every summer after my sixteenth birthday until I got my job at the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

Wayne's thumbing technique is improved, he thinks, by the fact that his hands are big and his right thumb slightly double-jointed. "They see my thumb waving in the breeze," he says, "and they become so interested they stop."

Both men and women have given Wayne a "lift" during his travels. He prefers men as hosts but gets along well with old ladies, too.

Expert Mother Finds New Job

Mrs. Lottie Williams holds no university degrees in domestic science but she describes herself as "a good, sensible housekeeper of the old-fashioned school."

And so Director Edmund Goulding has engaged her as kitchen technical director on Warner Bros. picturization of "White Banners."

Mrs. Williams is now showing Claude Rains, Fay Bainter and Kay Johnson how a kitchen of the early 1920's functioned. She is also demonstrating how to put nipples on baby's bottles, how to change diapers and remove sleeping suits from infants.

Smile Dit It.

Clark Griffith

50 Years in Baseball

By Shirley Povich

Griffith Hangs Up Manager's Uniform, Handing Reins to McBride; Gets Goose Goslin for $6,000; Engineers Peckinpaugh Deal.

Chapter Twenty-Four.

IT WAS WITH MORE THAN A TRACE of nostalgia that Clark Griffith launched his Washington team in the 1921 pennant race after the return from spring training. No longer did he feel the crunching of spikes beneath his feet. And if the business at hand were wiping his brow, he looked in vain for the handy sleeve of his sweatshirt which, for 34 years, had served so nobly in that capacity.

For the first season since 1887, when he had joined up with the Bloomington Reds as a lad of 16, Clark Griffith was not in uniform.

He had laid away his baseball suit at the end of the 1920 season. The growing responsibilities of the Washington club presidency, in addition to the managerial duties, had forced Griffith to step down as manager. His veteran shortstop, George McBride, second in command during Griffith's nine years in Washington, was the "Old Fox's" choice to succeed himself.

To the business of building up the Washington team into a pennant-contender, Griffith applied himself furiously. He knew the club's weaknesses. The Senators needed at least one capable left-handed hitting outfielder. McBride, himself, was slowing up at shortstop and Frank O'Rourke, imported from the International League, was proving no success at the job.

Griffith scanned the minor league lists, dispatched his lone scout, Joe Engel, to all sections of the country whenever a "tip" on a ballplayer was forthcoming. McBride had the 1921 team up in the running, the season loomed as at least a financial success, and Griffith was prepared to buy ball players.

From the president of the Columbia (S. C.) club, of the South Atlantic League, Griffith received a letter declaring that he owned a promising young outfielder who could be purchased for $5,000. Immediately, the "Old Fox" moved Scout Engel into the South Atlantic League. A month passed and no report came from Engel.

Surmising that the Columbia sensation was not living up to notices, Griffith started looking in other directions for an outfielder. He was meeting with little success and, while his club was on a Western swing, Griffith hied to Baltimore for a week-end of bridge and golf at the Suburban Country Club.

There he golfed with a stockholder in the Baltimore Orioles, who begged off from a second game with the plea that the Orioles had returned to the city and he wanted to see that day's game. The talk then drifted naturally to baseball.

Golf Conversation Uncovers Outfielder's Identity.

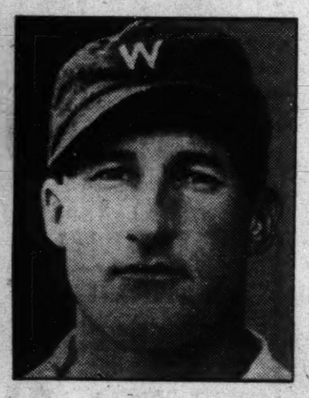
"JACK DUNN'S CLUB isn't doing so well lately; a bit weak in the outfield," volunteered the Baltimore stockholder. "But he has prospects. He's dickering now for a young fellow who is going to be a sensation."

Griffith's ears pricked.

"Good young outfielders are scarce," he said, "especially fellows who can hit. Where's Dunn getting the boy from?"

"The South Atlantic League," came the reply. "Dunn's paying $5,500 for him. Well, I've got to be going. See you on the first tee tomorrow."

It was a restless Griffith that awaited that golf date on the morrow. Who was it that Dunn was about to buy from the South Atlantic League? Could it be the boy whom Griffith had been tipped off about by the Columbia club owner? And if Dunn was offering $5,500 for a class B league rookie the young man must have something besides an ambition to break into the big leagues. Canny Jack Dunn sold his ballplayers for big money, but he was not in the habit of paying for his own talent in $5,500 chunks.



LEON GOSLIN, who came to Washington from the Sally League for $6,000.

At any rate, it was worth investigating. But Griffith shrank from asking his Baltimore friend point-blank the identity of the Sally League outfielder. With tact, he might get the same results.

Casually, Griffith, the next day, again brought up the subject of baseball.

"Those Orioles look as if they'll win another pennant if they strengthen their outfield," he told his Baltimore friend.

"That's what Dunn thinks," came the reply.

"From what I hear about that Sally League outfielder, he seems to be just the fellow Dunn needs," continued Griffith. "You know who I mean—that fellow what's-his-name, er-uh—" and Griffith snapped his fingers in seeming disgust at his general forgetfulness and inability to recall the name.

"Goose" Goslin Comes to Washington for $6,000.

THAT CLEW WAS SUFFICIENT for Griffith. That night he telephoned the Columbia club owner, learned that Baltimore had not yet closed the deal and that Columbia was under no obligations to Dunn.

Griffith bought "Goose" Goslin for $6,000.

At the end of the 1921 season, George McBride, who had landed the Senators in fourth place, voluntarily retired as the Washington manager. He had done a better than tolerable job with the team and Griffith was pleased with his stewardship. But McBride was ill throughout the latter half of the season. He had been struck in the face by a thrown ball, while batting in infield practice, and what appeared to be a normally minor accident developed into a painful and trouble-giving mishap. McBride was eager to retire.

When McBride stepped down, Griffith again reached into the ranks and rewarded another of his veteran players with the management of the club. His choice this time was Outfielder Clyde Milan, who had served the Washington club brilliantly for 15 years, who had set a new league record of 88 stolen bases in a single season and who, during the lean years of the Senators, had continued as a stand-out player.

The season of 1921 had been profitable for Griffith and he was prepared to bid boldly for any talent available around the league. His pitching staff was holding up; his outfield with Sam Rice and Goose Goslin flanking McBride, would do, and young Stanley Harris was developing into something of a sensation at second base. Joe Judge, on first, was a genuine star.

Harry Frazee's Boston Red Sox had one—the veteran, but still sprightly, Roger Peckinpaugh. Griffith visioned him as an ideal performer in Washington's infield. But how to get Peck?

Frazee would not dare to sell Peckinpaugh to the Washington club outright for cash. Boston's newspapers and fans were already heaping

1,000 Fans See Hoyas Win Third

By Bob Garrison.

Georgetown University's harassed Hoya basketball team concluded an unbecoming five-game losing streak and registered its third Eastern Conference triumph at the same time by emerging victorious in a feud staged with the West Virginia Mountaineers, last night, at Tech High, 40-36.

It was a loosely played ball game that was decided only after the boys had fought through one overtime period. The score of the regulation game was tied at 36-all. Approximately 1,000 persons saw the game.

And the name of Johnny Frank, substitute senior guard, stands out like Braille lettering in the victory following a second half performance that single handedly broke up the Mountaineers' scoring system and inspired the Hilltoppers to go on and win.

Frank Bats 1.000

Frank was inserted at the start of the second period for Francis "Red" Daly and given the assignment of stopping the long-range firing of Harry Lothes, whose sensational distance shooting had been largely responsible for the 22-16 half-time lead West Virginia held over the local club.

Frank batted 1.000 in his task as he allowed the shifty Mountaineer, who had scored 11 in the first half, not a single point, actually permitting him but one toss at the basket. As a result, the Hoyas, led by Mike Petroskey and the same Frank, went on to score 20 points in the duration of the second half and four in the overtime to win.

As far as scoring was concerned, it was a battle of centers, with Big Petrosky scoring 12 points in the duel while lanky Homer Brooks was running up the same number.

The fact that it took the Hoyas an extra period is due to the iron-nerve foul shot taken by Brooks with his team one point behind and 17 seconds remaining in the regulation game. Just as he had made good on three previous attempts, he converted a foul by Ed Kurtyka into the tying poing just before the gun sounded.

One Point Behind.

Georgetown caught the Mountaineers early in the second half as the result of a series of downright sensational set shots by Gregario, Kurtyka and Frank and passed them on a goal by Petrosky. He stole the ball from a host of opponents and dribbled half the length of the court to put the Hoyas out in front, 25-24.

From then until Brooks sank his free shot to tie the score at 36-36, the West Virginians were always just one point behind. They trailed 36-33, however, when Brooks scored a spinner goal and was permitted the chance to tie up the works when Referee Menton called a foul on Kurtyka.

Although the partially-bald Georgetown forward might have been labeled "goat" by some of the spectators who had seen him do the same thing Saturday night to permit Penn State to win, he quickly redeemed himself.

Frank Gets Final.

For no sooner had the five-minute extra session opened than he gave the Hoyas their winning lead with a short one-handed flip from the foul circle, to make the score 38-36, Georgetown. Fittingly, Frank, who had silenced dead-eye Lothes, added the final basket of the game on a quick cut-in play. The losers missed several long shots in the overtime but were on the defensive most of the time.

The sudden change in offensive tactics in the second half produced favorable results for Coach Fred Mesmer who sent his team back onto the court to fire the ball from long-range rather than continue to work it near the basket. Close guarding by both teams rendered the latter style ineffective and made for rough play most of the way.

In a preliminary game, Georgetown's freshman five defeated the George Washington High School team from Alexandria, 49-41, in a free scoring game. Ed Schillo, acting captain, was high scorer for the winners with 13 points, while Nolan led the losers with 21.

Wojack Gets 'Shellacking' By Abrams

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Nicky Camarata, currently doing his clouting around New York, took time out from more pressing business to win a unanimous decision from Cristabol Jaramillo last night at Turner's Arena. The attendance was 1,200.

Jaramillo did not lose without waging a terrific fight. The trouble was he saved it until the eighth and final round, and then it was too late. Before that Camarata won everything but Referee Eddie La Fond's watchfob, hitting the swarthy Puerto Rican with every punch allowed under the existing rules.

Jaramillo's best rounds were the first, fourth and last, but even then he did not seriously damage Camarata. Cristabol almost broke the arena bike record in the second, fifth and sixth. Only Camarata's presence in the same ring prevented him from achieving that distinction.

Camarata gave him a neat boxing lesson, despite an injured hand sustained in the third round. He made the mistake of hitting Jaramillo on the head. The Italian tried to get inside to the body but Cristobal, a capable ring general, would have none of it.

Harder to catch than a butterfly, Jaramillo nevertheless, took a two-fisted beating in the fifth when Camarata appeared to be seriously trying for a knockout. He bobbed and weaved out of danger, however, and was bouncing blithely at the bell.

The islander had trouble making the weight earlier in the afternoon, and then with bandaging his hands just before the scrap, but that was inconsequential compared to the trouble Camarata caused in the ring. The winner was nothing less than masterful in handling his man, although there were times when he loafed like a Miami millionaire.

George Abrams won a unanimous decision over Frankie Wojack in the eight-round semifinal, after belting him around the ring unmercifully him unmercifully all the way. Wojack qualified as the toughest man ever seen at Turner's, if that means anything to him.

Wojack, no puncher, but a catcher Clark Griffith might do well to look over, led with his chin, literally, and why he didn't go down will remain one of the city's unsolved mysteries. Abrams hit him so hard and often it sounded like popcorn on the fire, but Wojack shed the punches like so many love taps and waded in for more.

Wojack's knees finally buckled in the seventh and it looked as though he finally might topple over, but neither Abrams nor the amazed audience were aware of his durability. He wobbled slightly and waded in again, much to Abram's chagrin. George was bleeding slightly from a scratch over his right eye at the finish, but was unmarked otherwise.

Tommy Hoover opened the show by winning over Joe Magio, of Philadelphia, on a technical knockout after two minutes of the third round. It was no contest.

El Brookman drew Sammy Bracala in another four-rounder, and Mike Morton got the decision over Charley Gilley, of Baltimore, over the same distance.

Toledo Beats Colonial Five

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Toledo, Ohio, Feb. 7.—The fast Toledo University basketball team defeated the strong George Washington five here tonight by a score of 57 to 43. This makes George Washington's third defeat on their present road trip.

Toledo won the contest because they knew how to play a rougher game. By their roughness they forced out Faris, Garber and Silkowitz, three George Washington stars, on personal fouls. With these stars out of the contest Toledo had an easy time of it and walked away with the battle.

Before they were vanquished by the personal-foul route, Faris and Garber played a whale of a game, Faris getting eight field goals and one foul basket, while Garber put across five field goals.

George Washington started out like real winners, putting over six straight field baskets without a miss. Toledo, however, also came across with some brilliant footwork and tied up the count. This seemed to rattle the visitors and before the first half ended Toledo led 35 to 22.

After the rest period, however, George Washington came back strong and by clever team work on the part of Faris and Garber succeeded in tieing up the contest 41 to 41. Toledo, however, then got rough and shortly afterwards Faris, Garber and Silkowitz all were banished on personal fouls and Toledo then easily romped home with the game.

Chukowitz was the big star for Toledo. He made 12 field goals and 4 foul baskets. Alverez and Hintz also did well, getting 8 points each.

Jimmy Rode to Death On Another's Mount

By Walter Haight.
The Post's Racing Editor.

It might have been a stone turned up by the track harrow, a slight depression in the running surface, a brittle leg that could not stand the burning drive, or a spent and exhausted animal; but, whatever the cause, a horse and jockey "making their move" to the din of the crowd, suddenly crashed to the track. Another horse, with rider probably too intent on getting every ounce of speed out of his mount to sense trouble, tripped over a flying leg and in the resultant tangle of struggling horseflesh and hoofs, Gentleman Jockey Jimmy Sullivan received the injuries that led to his death yesterday.

Elsewhere on these sports pages are the details of Gentleman Jockey Jimmy Sullivan's passing—words that crackled into the telegraph wire from Southern California yesterday, they appear cold and black in the columns that once reflected the saddle glory of the Petworth boy. They fail to tell of events leading up to the fatal accident that seem more like a fantastic dream of some Hollywood scenario writer than fact.

Indeed, Fate must have used a marked deck when it stacked the cards on young Sullivan.

Stays With Burches.

Two years ago, Dion Kerr, Washington trainer and himself a former jockey, was seeking a contract rider to handle the mounts of his stable. He admired the courage and ability of Sullivan and offered him a position as jockey for the barn. Sullivan was in that period of his career, soon after losing his apprentice allowance, when virtually all riders must make good a second time, and he believed that his best chance for success was with his then employers, Preston and Selby Burch.

Sullivan declined the job and Kerr signed Charlie Rosengarten, Sullivan's best friend among the jockeys. Rosengarten, like Sullivan, had served his saddle apprenticeship under the guidance of the Burch brothers. The position with Kerr proved a profitable one for Rosengarten and led to his being assigned the mount on Aneroid, one of the big money winners of last year.

Last Sunday at Agua Caliente, Charlie Rosengarten was scheduled to ride Toro Mark, the horse that carried Sullivan to his death!

Sends Friend to Death.

The race was the last of the day. Rosengarten could serve a double purpose by turning the mount over to his pal, Sullivan. The Washington jockey needed the work and, then again, being able to avoid the race traffic, Rosengarten could return earlier to Los Angeles, where he is living.

Jimmy Sullivan, in strict turf terms, did not rate the prefix of "Gentleman Jockey" because he was a professional, but he was a little gentleman from the sharp tip of his boot to the wind-tossed button on the top of his hat and a "trying rider" if there ever was one. Sullivan, as a boy, set his goal as that of a jockey before he had even sat in a horse's saddle.

A former Washington Post carrier and an altar boy at St. Gabriel's Church, Sullivan decided to follow in the footsteps of Sonny Workman, the Washington boy who came out of St. Aloysius parish to win saddle fame.

It is said that Sullivan's jockey career took definite shape one day when he overstayed his leave on a public riding academy horse for which he deposited $1.50 for an hour's ride. Into the riding academy stable he went to clean stalls and work out his debt, and henceforth he belonged to racing.

Little Jimmy beseeched Hugh Miller, then The Post's racing photographer, for an introduction to a trainer. Miller recommended the 15-year-old lad to Preston Burch.

Stayed in School.

Jimmy's father, James A. Sullivan, former state deputy and head of the District of Columbia Knights of Columbus and a District A. A. U. official, was reluctant to allow him to stop school. Undaunted, Jimmy, who had been graduated from St.

Jockey Sullivan Fails to Survive Operation.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

San Diego, Calif., Feb. 7.—Jockey James A. Sullivan, jr., of Washington, D. C., died this morning at the Elvin Sanitarium in nearby National City, from injuries received in a spill a week ago at the Agua Caliente (Mexico) race track. Sullivan, 23 years old, failed to regain consciousness following an operation last Tuesday to remove a blood clot from his brain.

Immediately following the accident, Sullivan was believed to have been suffering only from a slight concussion and shock and he was sent to the sanatorium to rest at the insistence of Gene Normile, general manager of the track.

Early Tuesday, Sullivan's condition took a sudden turn and Dr. H. E. Crabtree, noted West Coast surgeon, was called in to operate. The jockey's young wife and his father, who flew here last Wednesday from the National Capital, were at his bedside when the end came.

Sullivan was injured in the last race of last Sunday's program. He was riding Toro Mark and the horse was moving up on the outside of the field when, it is reported, he crossed his front legs and fell to the track. Sullivan was thrown

Anacostians Routed, 34-9

The Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School basketball team last night swamped the Anacostia five, 34 to 9, in the Bethesda gym before a scant chowd of some 200 persons.

Hayden, Bethesda's regular forward, led the scoring with 12 points, all registered on field goals. The Bethesdans had things so easy during the contest that Coach Allen Vogt inserted his second team in the second and third quarters.

Phil Vannais, Smith, Hollis, Sullivan and Hughes carried on in place of the varsity, but failed to do much actual scoring. But for that matter the Anacostians didn't get a chance to do any either.

The Bethesda-Chevy Chase Jayvees defeated the Anacostia Jayvees, 23 to 18, in a preliminary.

Crowder and Mace Win In Local Cue Tourney

Washington, Chevy Chase Receive Invitation Tourney Dates

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Invitation tournament dates were given to Washington and Chevy Chase at the annual meeting of the District Golf Association last night at the University Club, the former returning to the Invitation field after an absence of two years while the latter planned to continue its yearly play for the Taft and Sherman trophies. The District Amateur championship was awarded the Congressional Country Club.

The association, by a vote of 7 to 2, went on record as favoring the retention of the stymie, with its modification, in accordance with the wishes of the United States Golf Association. The plea of retiring President James Cosgrove, of Manor, to abolish the stymie, was heeded only by the Manor and Army and Navy representatives. Indian Spring, Congressional, Woodmont, Washington, Chevy Chase, Columbia and Belle Haven voted to retain.

In another important move, the local links body sanctioned a junior links committee, to be appointed by Frank Emmet, of Georgetown Prep, with five members on the board. If satisfactory arrangements with the member clubs of the District association can be worked out the clubs will play host to the various school league matches, and aid the scholastic linksmen by any possible method.

The District Junior championship was awarded the Manor Club and Washington will play host to the District mixed two-ball play, on September 28. The junior will be played June 27 and 28 at Manor, in flights of 8 instead of 16, the former method.

The Washington Invitation event will inaugurate the '38 tournament year, May 4, 5 and 6, with Chevy Chase the following week, May 11, 12 and 13. The District Amateur, to be played at Congressional for the first time in a number of years, has been set for September 21, 22 and 23.

Ralph Fowler, of the Washington Golf and Country Club, succeeded Cosgrove as president of the organization, with D. D. L. McGrew, of Chevy Chase, stepping in as vice president. Dr. R. A. Keilty, Congressional, former president of the Middle Atlantic Golf Association, was elected second vice president, with Dr. W. C. Barr, of Congressional, being retained as secretary-treasurer.

Two amendments were made in the by-laws, the annual dues of each club being raised from $10 to $25 by a unanimous ballot, and the Jimmy Hines, a playing partner, used about 45 seconds on long putts and approaches, Charlie Fletcher was at the stop watch . . . A plan, similar to the one proposed around here as an anniversary of Fred McLeod's winning the National Open, has been proposed in Massachusetts, honoring Francis Ouimet, who won the National Open over Harry Vardon and Ted Ray, 25 years ago at Brookline . . . What price par? . . . Mac Smith won $33.33 in the recent Los Angeles Open with successive rounds of 72-71-71-71, 285 . . . In 1928 in the same event, Harry Cooper shot 287 and won top money of $1,500 . . . Cooper was three strokes better in 1938 and won $40 . . . Henry Picard and Johnny Revolta will seek their fourth consecutive Miami fourball championship in the March event.

Vincent Eldred, Pittsburgh golf professional and a correspondent for a Smoky City paper while on the winter tour, scored the Hershey, Pa., officials for restricting the 1938 event to an invitation affair for the 16 top-notch professionals . . . Eldred pointed the fact that the only way the 16 players invited to the event gained a reputation was by playing in open events, and that two years ago neither Snead or Guldahl would have been invited . . . Eldred said it was not a contribution to golf . . . Sam Snead's withdrawal from the Pasadena Open after playing the first 14 holes in nearly as many strokes over par, recalled other famous "pick-ups" . . . Arnold Massy, French pro, picked up in a playoff for the British Open with Harry Vardon; Bobby Jones withdrew from the British Open in the third round; Tommy Armour called it quite in the 1935 National Open, and Henry Cotton refused to continue play in an English tournament last summer after a bad first round, declaring he could hardly finish in the money and therefore saw no reason for giving any more time or money to the event . . . Lawson Little, on a challenge, drove two balls over the exposition tower of San Francisco's 1939 Golden Gate International Exposition . . . the tower reached 284 feet into the air . . . Little teed a ball 75 yards back of the tower on a 12-inch sand tee, and using a driver, cleared it by more than 50 feet . . . the balls bounding off the exhibit palace, some 300 yards from the "tee."

Fast Finish By Maerial Takes Place

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 7. The California sportsman, Norman W. Church, scored his second feature race victory in as many racing days when Sir Oracle, fleet-footed son of Bull Dog, literally ran away and hid from four other sprinters in the Royal Palm Purse here today. The colt ran 6 furlongs in 1:10 2-5, two-fifths of a second slower than the track record, to register by five lengths.

Dewitt Page's Widener Cup hopeful, Maeriel, although finding the short distance against his chances, closed with great speed on the rail to garner second money by a half length. Mrs. T. Stevenson's Kingsbury headed H. P. Headley's Fraidy Cat for the show, while Bomar Stable's Grand Slam, making his seasonal debut after an unsuccessful 1937 campaign, brought up the rear. It was a messy start, with the winner and Kingsbury having the advantage.

Sir Oracle, second choice to Fraidy Cat, paid $6.80 for $2. He was ridden by Vere Thompson, who scored astride Lavengro in Saturday's Bahamas Handicap.

Sir Oracle, a double winner at Tropical Park prior to finishing well out of the picture in the Hialeah Inaugural Handicap, never left the result in doubt once he busted away from the gate in motion. The Bay sprinter quickly left his field daylight behind him and added to his lead the farther he went. Kingsbury and Fraidy Cat alternated in second position while making futile efforts to keep up. Neither could stave off the belated rush of Maeriel in the closing drive.

Grand Slam, unable to win eight efforts last year, was making his first start since mid-November. The Chance Play horse, one of the best juveniles of 1936, was last away and never menaced the leaders.

Favorite players began the new week on the right foot when they backed Spin On, from the successful Woolford Farm establishment, in the 3-furlong initial event. This was the filly's fourth outing. It was preceded by some very promising efforts, and today the daughter of Insco just got up to win by a head after being kept close to the early pace. Kate Smith could not maintain a slight advantage but saved the place by another head from Spanish Mammon. Spin On finished in 0:34 4-5 to return $5.70.

The Woolford Farm of Herbert M. Woolf accounted for both ends of the $14.90 daily double when French Bread, paying $7, took the second purse in little more than a gallop by six lengths. Head Mistress nosed Puddles out of second money. Harvery Keppler allowed French Bread to sprint into a commanding lead, then had only to sit still while his mount increased her lead through the stretch. The winner was a slight favorite over Bess B., which tired out of the picture after sampling the victor's pace.

Oddesa's Pride, a plater on which many players had given up, came to life in the third race and sped home by four lengths to return $36.50. Albert Schmidl, who has become a long shot specialist, took the gelding into the lead in the first 3 furlongs and the combination drew clear in the stretch. Ethelmont came from far out of it to take the place by a length from Lovick. Pamelob was moving up in threatening fashion around the last turn, then went very lame and was pulled up to last place.

SPIN ON, away forwardly, followed in nearest pursuit of the pace all the way, responded with determination when the final test came and outlasted his opposition. KATE SMITH, quickest to begin, swerved out in the opening furlong, but displayed high speed and drew out. She faltered when challenged and put to a drive. SPANISH MAMMON, a trifle slow to get in his stride, finished stoutly on the outside.

FRENCH BREAD, vigorously urged, opened up a clear lead in the run down the backstretch and held away throughout, but was briskly ridden through the stretch and had nothing left at the finish. HEAD MISTRESS, a forward contender on the inside all the way, finished gamely under punishment and outlasted PUDDLES. The latter lacked early foot, but closed strongly through the stretch.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ODDESA'S PRIDE, $36.50, $14.40, $7.90; ETHELMONT, $10.90, $5.30; LOVICK, $2.80.

ODDESA'S PRIDE, a forward contender, raced TOWN CAR into submission rounding the turn, drew out into a winning lead when straightened into the stretch, but was kept under steady pressure to the finish. ETHELMONT, slow to get going, moved up rapidly on the outside entering the stretch. He swerved over toward the inner rail approaching the furlong pole and caused a jam, but continued gamely to hold the others safe. LOVICK, under restraint early, made a bold bid when called upon, but was troubled at the eighth pole and faltered.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-half miles (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 3:33. Off at 3:35. LITTLE BANNER, under steadying restraint the first mile, gradually improved her position on the outside, shook off FAR CRY through the stretch, but was ridden out vigorously to the end. FAR CRY, well up all the way, took a brief lead on the stretch turn and held on well when put to a drive, but was not equal to the winner. BOMAR broke well, but was gradually taken back in the early running. He closed stoutly in the stretch.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLIND EAGLE, $14.20, $6.70, $4.70; PERFECT PEACE (entry), $3.90, $3.00; PERNIE, $5.70.

BLIND EAGLE broke alertly, but lacked early speed and dropped back in the early running. He moved up fast on the outside when straightened into the stretch and wore PERFECT PEACE down in the final stride. PERFECT PEACE, going forwardly under slight restraint in the opening half mile, went into contention rapidly when placed to pressure, took command and appeared to hold a winning lead, but Arcaro became careless and tossed the race off. PERNIE, prominent all the way, made a bold effort turning into the stretch, but faltered slightly in the stretch run.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Royal Palm. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start poor from Bahr gate. Won cleverly; place driving. Went to post at 4:31. Off at 4:32½. Winner, N. SIR ORACLE, away fast, set a rapid pace in the early running and shook off his opposition the opening quarter mile. He was steadied in front until straightened into the stretch, then opened up a commanding lead to win under brisk urging. MAERIEL, slow to find his stride and outrun in the first half mile, stole through on the inside entering the stretch and closed a big gap to outlast KINGSBURY. The latter broke forwardly and went prominently on the outside all the way and outstayed FRAIDY CAT in the final drive.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-half miles (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:02. Off at 5:03. FLYING BANNER, stoutly restrained until leaving the backstretch, moved up steadily when placed to pressure, wore JIM JOHN down through the stretch and held KIEVS PENNANT safe in the final drive. The latter, rated off the pace the first mile, made a game effort, but could not overhaul the winner. JIM JOHN, prominent all the way, took command with a rush in the run down the backstretch, saved ground thereafter, but faltered through the stretch.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—A. O'CONNELL, $6.80, $4.60, $3.20; WROUGHT IRON, $9.20, $5.60; MANY MOONS, $3.90.

A. O'CONNELL, under slight restraint and in tight quarters on the inside until midway around the lower turn, swung to the outside entering the stretch, moving with determination and disposed of the leaders, winning going away. WROUGHT IRON, slow to get going, gradually bettered his position on the outside after leaving the backstretch and closed willingly and outlasted MANY MOONS. The latter, prominent in the entire trip, assumed command entering the stretch, but then faltered in the final drive.

$5.20 Ticket Paid By Sink or Swim

New Orleans, Feb. 7 (AP).—Sink or Swim, 3-year-old filly owned by Conny Smythe, of Toronto, made it three straight, two of them at the Fair Grounds, in accounting for the mile and 70-yard feature at the New Orleans track today.

The daughter of Swift and Sure, a mediocre performer until late in her 2-year-old career, trailed the early pace set first by Wild Phara and then Little Tramp. She went to the front in the home stretch, however, and easily whipped Little Tramp, a consistent winner at the Fair Grounds. Gold Satin, winner of her previous start, was a fast-closing third.

Strongly back in the mutuels, Sink or Swim paid $5.20 after covering the distance in 144 1-5.

Eastern Slight Favorite Over St. John's Tonight

This Morning

WITH SHIRLEY POVICH

When they lifted young Jimmy Sullivan into the saddle at Agua Caliente ten days ago and gave him his riding instructions on Toro Mark, he was to get $25 if he won the race, $10 if he didn't. That he was taking a chance with his life amid the thunder of flying hoofs probably didn't occur to the little Washington boy to whom a mount in a horse race had become commonplace. He had been riding for seven years, as many as three or four mounts a day.

POVICH.

Little Jimmy died yesterday from injuries suffered in a spill that day at Agua Caliente and his death serves to remind us forcibly that it can happen; that the profession of a jockey is probably the most hazardous of any sports calling, including bull fighting. The bull fighter, at least, has only one bovine to contend with.

But the jockey, like little Jimmy, is exposed to a dozen hazzards. He may be the victim of a wild, unruly mount—his own or any one of ten other entries in the race. He may be the victim of a hole in the track that will cause his horse to go down; or other horses to go down in front of him. He may be an innocent party to a "doped" horse, or he may be a victim of brash riders who may cause a jam. He is literally taking his life in the saddle with him when he goes to the post astride a high-strung thoroughbred, a product of generations of in-breeding, which sometimes leaves them with no horse sense whatsoever, simply a mad desire to run.

The reports from Agua Caliente are that little Sullivan's mount "crossed his legs" and fell and that the jockey was trampled by the horse behind, which also went down, but veteran race horse men do not subscribe to the belief that a horse ever crosses his legs. A hole or faulty spot in the track usually accounts for a horse going down when not affected by a jam, they declare.

Jams, of course, are the most frequent causes of fatalities. In recent years there has been a rising crescendo of complaints that the jockeys are getting too enthusiastic in their efforts to win, especially in an important race. The greater the prize the more chance-taking. In the Kentucky Derby of 1935, Donny Meade on Brokers Tip and Fischer on Head Play staged a virtual fistfight from their saddles throughout the stretch.

There is a "situation" in racing now that has already drawn the attention of stewards at Hialeah, who have ordered patrol judges to watch closely the tactics of Jockey Wayne Wright. Wright has long been feuding with his colleagues in the saddle. He earned their enmity by his rough tactics in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap in 1936 when, astride Top Row, he fouled both of the other chief contenders, Rosemont and Time Supply. He came to blows at Hialeah two weeks ago with Johnny Longden in the jockey room after Longden had charged him with crowding.

The little fellows who gain their livelihood in the saddle are at the mercy of the "bad actors" among the horses. At Laurel last year, there was a typical case of helplessness on the part of the jockey. The boy was astride a bad actor which broke well from the gate but was so "hopped up" that it failed to take the first turn, running straight and true to the outside fence and crashing himself against it. They shot the horse and took the rider to the hospital.

The reports of the fabulous earnings of jockeys was pretty well blasted the other day when it was stated at Hialeah that the weekly profits of Jockey Henry Mora during the past week was $220. Mora, at the time, was the leading jockey at the popular winter course.

If the rider is a top jockey, he rides an average of three races a day, and if he wins all three he has earned $45. Out of that comes his agent's fee and his valet's fee. A valet is a necessary adjunct. And he is a valet in every sense of the word, caring for the jockey's tack, selecting the changes of colors and actually dressing the rider before each race.

The top-notch riders' earnings are not limited to their fees-per-mount, however. They usually operate under contracts with particular stables. When Jockey Pascuma signed to ride for the Edward B. McLean stable for the season of 1936, his contract called for a salary of $15,000 for the year, 10 per cent of the winnings of all stake races and the permission to accept outside mounts when the McLean stable had no entries in a race.

A rider who wins the Kentucky Derby or other rich stake that returns the owner upwards of $50,000 can usually expect to be rewarded most handsomely. In fact, the rider who does not receive a $5,000 commission for a Kentucky Derby victory feels that he has been treated shabbily.

But for every rider who succeeds in getting a contract or winning a rich stake with its profitable honorarium, there are 50 riders who can hope only to earn that $25 winners' fee in the cheaper races. And the hoofs of those cheaper horses are every bit as deadly dealing.

Vince DiMaggio Signs.

Boston, Feb. 7 (AP).—The Boston Bees Baseball Club today received the signed contract of Vince DiMaggio, center fielder, and brother of holdout Joe DiMaggio, of the New York Yankees.

Two Squads Are at Peak For Big Tilt

City Cage Title Hinges on Outcome; Feature at 8 O'clock.

By Jack Munhall.

Eastern and St. John's yesterday finished practice for their basketball fuss tonight at C. U. gym. The game, scheduled at 8 o'clock following a preliminary, is being billed for the city championship inasmuch as the Johnnies are the prep champions and the Lincoln Park five is favored to win the interhigh series, of which they are the leaders.

Meeting unexpectedly at Catholic University where Eastern held a workout, Mike Kelly, its coach and Gene Augustefer, pilot of the St. John's, had little to say as to the outcome of the important contest.

While Eastern familiarized itself with the court on which it meets the Cadets, St. John's held a light shooting and passing drill in the school gym. Both squads are at full strength and should be at the peak when they take the floor. The Johnnies, who appeared stale Saturday night when they whipped Mount St. Joseph's, are back in the form which has carried them through 14 scholastic encounters without defeat.

Although St. John's has a far more impressive record than Eastern, the odds on the game will be practically even. In fact, a slight edge may be awarded the public school quint.

St. John's, losing only to the formidable Georgetown Frosh, has spanked such teams as Bethesda-Chevy Chase, Western, Tech (twice), Calvert Hall, Gonzaga, Georgetown Prep (twice) and Mount St. Joseph, Baltimore champion.

Mike Kelly's charges after a slow start have been bowling over opponents with great regularity, averaging about 40 points a game, or approximately 7 more than the Johnnies have averaged per game. Thus the Cadets are staking all on the defense which has limited foes to less than 25 points per contest.

St. John's will start Francis Battiste and Mulvihill at forwards; Giebel at center, and Gallagher and John (Rosy) Swagart at guards. Eastern will counter with "Soup" Hancock and Ralph Matera at forwards; Quantrille at center, and Lombardy and Lusby at guards.

Western Faces Central Tonight.

Western is expected to tie Eastern for the interhigh basketball lead tonight when it engages Central in the second half of a doubleheader at Tech gym. The first game brings together Tech and Woodrow Wilson at 7:30 o'clock.

Central, still without a victory after six series contests, has slight chance to upset Cliff Moore's smooth Red Raiders who are but a half game behind the leading Eastern team which has won five of six games. If Western gets by Central the chances are that the deadlock with Eastern will remain until February 23, when the two meet in a game that promises to decide the title.

clear of his mount but was struck by the hoofs of Lazy Canter, another horse, which tripped over Toro Mark.

The Washington boy learned to ride at the old Benning, D. C., track and caught the fancy of Preston Burch, trainer and owner. He was under contract to Burch when he rode his first winner in October, 1932. For the last three years, Sullivan has been a "free lance" rider, although he had a verbal agreement with J. W. Long, owner and trainer with a string of horses in this State.

Sullivan, besides his wife and their 2-year-old son, is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Sullivan; Patrick and William, brothers, and Mary and Ross, sisters.

The body of James A. Sullivan, jr., will be shipped to Washington at once. Funeral services will be held at St. Gabriel's Church either Saturday or Monday morning.

executive committee increased from two to four members.

Members elected to the latter group included Dr. Paul Stewart, Columbia; J. H. Taylor, Belle Haven; Commander E. K. Patton, Army and Navy, and A. E. Steinem, Woodmont.

The action on the junior links committee was an important one, as it may lead to the District Golf Association taking the juniors under its wing and sponsoring all events.

The executive committee will request certain things from the schoolboys if the scholastic and prep league matches are to be played on the private courses, such as faculty supervision of all matches and only weekday afternoons as playing times, but the remainder of the slate will be submitted by the young golfers.

The stymie vote compared favorably with the other local golf bodies, the Middle Atlantic and Maryland State. The former group voted, 10 to 6, to retain the stymie and the State 8 to 1, with the local bodies voting last night, 7 to 2, to play the rule in all the local events.

The playing of the junior championship in flights of eight is expected to increase the entry list, which has dropped considerably in the last few years. It will also be the first time it has been a two-day match-play tourney.

Gaithersburg's Girls Lose, 29-14

Holding the opposing sextette scoreless in the first half, Bethesda-Chevy Chase girls' basketball team won its ninth game in ten starts from the Gaithersburg High team, in the Bethesda gym, 29-14.

Brown, Demitroff Added to Arena Wrestling Card

Orville Brown is coming back to Turner's Arena Thursday night by popular demand, this time to wrestle Boris Demitroff in a preliminary bout on the weekly wrassle card.

Brown, a strong and not too bad to look at Kansas athlete, struggled 30 minutes to a draw with Jim McMillen last week, the pair manufacturing one of the best bouts witnessed this winter at the mathouse. He made a hit with the fans and the matchmaker is only too willing to bring him back.

The Ali Baba-Dick Daviscourt bout heads the show, but if Demitroff is any good at all he and Brown can easily steal the play away from the featured artists.

Jimmy Took Pal's Mount

While sugar plums danced in the heads of his schoolmates, Jimmy was at the track at sunrise, rubbing, cooling and working horses. After school, Jimmy did not go to see the basketball game or the movies, he went back to Benning for more horses and more stable tasks. Convinced that Jimmy had his heart and soul in racing, the elder Sullivan agreed to that career for his son.

It was before a Washington crowd that young Sullivan rode his first winner. He was given the mount on Homework, a plater, in the seventh race at Laurel and the pair came out of the pack in the stretch drive to take down the decision. Homework paid a $26 mutuel, with many of Jimmy's friends waiting in line for the pay-off.

Sullivan's favorite mount was Thursday, a horse that once ran in cheap claiming races. Under Sullivan's guidance, Thursday moved up the money scale and surprised the turf world by winning in stake company. Sullivan's first handicap success was aboard Thursday.

The sensational gelding, Chase Me, was brought to the wire in front twice by Sullivan. The Washington boy piloted him at Havre de Grace and then won with him at Pimlico. Oddly, both were to end their careers in action. Chase Me was killed the following summer and is buried in the infield of a New York track.

Sullivan finished second with Rosemont, last year's winner of the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, in the Hopeful at Saratoga and won the 1933 running of the San Francisco Handicap at Tanforan while astride Prince Past.

Three years ago he married Ida Cuscianna, a New York girl whose brother is a jockey. They have a son, James A. Sullivan 3d.

Little Seeks Cliff Battles

Columbia Coach Offers Him Coaching Post.

Clifford (Gyp) Battles, Washington Redskins halfback and leading ground-gainer in the National Football League last season, has been offered the position of backfield coach at Columbia University by Head Coach Lou Little, it was learned last night.

Rumors have been heard frequently that Battles was approached by a big eastern school regarding a coaching position, but not until last night was Columbia revealed as the school.

Expected home this afternoon from Miami, where the Redskins lost to the Chicago Bears last Sunday, Battles is expected to make a definite decision later in the week.

The offer carries with it an increase in salary amounting to a third more than the former West Virginia Wesleyan star earned with the Redskins. But it will cost him his position with a local soft drink bottling and beer distributing concern. Battles is employed by Wash B. Williams during the off-season, and Williams last night said he could not continue in his capacity as assistant manager of the firm if he decided to accept the Columbia berth. Battles can, of course, hold the position if he remains with the local pro eleven.

Battles was offered the position in a letter received from Little while the Redskins were in Dallas, Tex. Later the Columbia mentor dispatched a lengthy telegram in an effort to induce him to sign. Battles, however, deferred rendering a final decision until he has given the matter more serious consideration.

Carolina Girl Is Medalist

By the Associated Press.

Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 7 (AP).—Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., beat women's par by two strokes today to become medalist in the women's Palm Beach tournament with a 36, 37—73 card.

Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., was a stronge behind the boyish South Carolinian. A 2-foot putt on the eighteenth green missed the cup and prevented Miss Bauer from tying for the medal.

Diana Fishwick, former British and French champion, who arrived Saturday, was off her game and failed to qualify for the championship round. Her 45, 40—85 put her in the second flight.

Bob Pastor Gets Verdict Over Ettore

Pedro Montanez Beats Speigal; Beauhuld Trims Berger.

By the United Press.

Pastor weighed 183, while Ettore was 11 pounds heavier.

From the second round when Pastor drew blood from Ettore's nose, the New York University graduate slashed at Ettore's face until the final bell. Pastor's cleverness and speed offset the heavier Ettore's bruising tactics.

There were no knockdowns, although Ettore was feeling the pace when the seventh round ended. Pastor tried vainly to floor the South Philadelphia Italian in the last round, but the blond still was on his feet at the bell.

Ettore was battered from corner to corner throughout the fight as Pastor's flickering left kept him off balance and on the defensive. Ettore did not land one telling blow on Pastor and confined his strategy to efforts to bore beneath Pastor's guard and work on the midsection.

Pastor exhibited none of the running style which earned him the honor of remaining the full 10 rounds with Champion Joe Louis a year ago, preferring to slug it out with Ettore. Pastor's right hook was his best weapon.

Pedro Montanez Decisions Speigal

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 7 (U.P.).—Pedro Montanez, 138, Puerto Rico, hammered out a ten-round decision over Tommy Speigal, 131½, Uniontown, Pa., before a capacity crowd of 4,000 here tonight.

Montanez was never in trouble as he gave a first-class boxing lesson to his younger and less-experienced opponent, whose right leg is permanently stiff from an injury suffered in a football game.

Montanez was superior at both the infighting and outside. His rights and lefts appeared to carry more steam than Speigal's, who was kept busy defending himself.

In a semifinal bout, Abe Simon, 253, of New York, won an eight-round decision over Jim Thompson, 238, of Pittsburgh.

Teddy Yarosz Wins Over Paul Mahoney

Although there were a few boos at the decision from the crowd of 7,000, Yarosz held a decided edge.

Beauhuld Finishes Strong to Win

New York, Feb. 7 (U.P.).—Billy Beauhuld, 139, Jersey City, N. J., lightweight, put on a rousing finish to output Maxie Berger, 138¼, a former Montreal boy now living in New York, in the feature eight-round bout at Royal Windsor Palace tonight. It was Beauhuld's first start since being kayoed by Feather Champion Henry Armstrong.

Berger kept ahead in the early milling with a long left jab that he kept in Billy's face while occasionally looping a right cross to the chin. Beauhuld concentrated on hard rights to the body which slowed down Berger toward the close. When Maxie began to wilt, Beauhuld bombarded him with rights to the head. Berger was bleeding from a cut lip at the end.

Fleming Urges More Low Cost Home Building

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Speaking on "Banks and Building" before the Washington Building Congress yesterday, President Robert V. Fleming of the Riggs National Bank called attention to the desirability of devising ways and means of providing adequate housing within the reach of lower income groups.

In his address at the February meeting of the congress at the Lafayette Hotel, Mr. Fleming, a past president if the American Bankers Association, expressed belief that it is in this classification the desire for home ownership is strongest and it is this field that is well worth developing in view of insufficient units now available.

Mr. Fleming assured the assembly that the people of Washington can count on full support from its banks in response to any legitimate request for aid in a home-building program, provided a demand is apparent to justify it. The speaker cautioned: "It behooves us to stimulate sound construction, but to guard against what may occasion overbuilding resulting in a collapse in the real estate market such as brought about the unhealthy condition of the '20s."

He placed the real estate and construction industry in Washington as second only in value to the business of the Federal Government and as an illustration of the importance of the former to the city, called attention to the fact that whereas in 1933 total construction contracts awarded in the District of Columbia amounted to $18,978,000 in 1937 the total was $65,444,000, according to F. W. Dodge Corporation statistics. "However," he predicted, "in view of the apartment house vacancies existing today, due to the new units which have been built, it does not appear likely to me that there will be this same large volume in 1938."

Commending the building congress, he described it as a new organization, but one which already had proved its value as a constructive force in the community life, in providing a forum for discussion of all matters pertaining to the building trades, rather than the promotion of one angle of this important business.

"From the record of your accomplishments to date," he said, "unquestionably the Washington Building Congress will prove to be as important and invaluable a clearing house for the dissemination of information and the stimulation of interest in building as have the building congresses established in other large centers of the country."

In praise of its renovizing campaign, he added, "nothing can be more helpful to our community than that there should be continued renovation and repair of local properties in order that deferred maintenance may be avoided."

Referring to the mission of the congress, he reminded that the building industry resolves its activities into two main fields; that of renovation and repair, and new construction. The congress, he said, could be of great assistance by ascertaining where there is need for repair and renovation and, so far as the banks of Washington are concerned, assure its members they are

Wheat Steady; Supply Lower

Chicago, Feb. 7 (AP).—Persistent talk that European importers must sooner or later become active buyers from this country had a steadying effect on Chicago wheat prices today. One reason that traders gave was an accelerated decrease of the United States wheat visible supply total today to almost 62,000,000 bushels under the season's peak.

Under such circumstances, Chicago wheat fluctuations today kept within unusual narrow limits of but ¾ of a cent a bushel, and closed virtually unchanged, ¼ cent off to ¼ cent up compared to Saturday's finish. Steel Operations Edge Up to 30.7%

New York, Feb. 7 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week advanced .2 of a point to 30.7 per cent of capacity, compared with 30.5 per cent last week, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today.

A month ago operations were at the rate of 27.8 per cent of capacity, while a year ago the rate was 80.6 per cent.

Two Million Lost Jobs in Last Quarter

Estimate of Unemployed Total on January 31 Is About 12,000,000.

New York, Feb. 7.—The number of persons employed in the United States rose in December for the third consecutive month, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. While retail trade employment showed a substantial gain as the result of season expansion, this gain was more than offset by the curtailment of employment in other lines. From November to December, 660,000 persons were added to the ranks of the unemployed, which raised the total unemployment figure to 10,911,000.

There were thus 1,930,000 more unemployed people in December than at the recovery low in September, when 8,981,000 persons were out of work. Unemployment during this period of three months increased at nearly twice the rate at which it rose at the end of 1929 when the previous recession began. During the last quarter of 1929, the number of unemployed persons showed an increase of 1,112,000.

The increase in unemployment during the last three months of 1937 raised the total number of unemployed to the highest figure since July, 1936. There were 1,605,000 more persons unemployed in December than in the corresponding month of the previous year.

The prospect is that the figure for January, which is not yet available, will show that the ranks of the unemployed are augmented by approximately another million persons and that the total number of unemployed in January was in the vicinity of 12,000,000. This is indicated by the fact that a large number of people lost their jobs as the result of the seasonal contraction of retail trade.

Counter Firm Loses SEC Registration

The Security and Exchange Commission announced yesterday that it had revoked the registration of Campagnoli & Co., over-the-counter dealers at 41 Broad street, New York. The commission charged that the firm, at different times from 1936 to this year, had "wilfully violated" the provisions of the security act.

The Securities and Exchange Commission also reported yesterday after the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, Chicago, had affirmed a lower court decree enjoining R. J. Koeppe & Co. and Robert J. Koeppe from manipulating prices of stock of the Paducah Cooperage Co. and the Wahl Co. on the Chicago Curb and Stock Exchanges. This is the first time an appeal has been made from a permanent injunction against manipulative activities on exchanges.

Retail Advertising 7.2% Under Year Ago

Chicago, Feb. 7.—Retailers' use of display space in newspapers during the week ended January 29 declined 7.2 per cent below the corresponding week of last year, according to a report issued by Advertising Age.

The report, based on retail display carried in newspapers in 79 important cities shows a total of 15,729,201 lines for the week reported, against 16,953,031 lines for the compared week of last year, the loss amounting to 1,223,830 lines.

Stocks Decline in Dullest Trading Since Last Summer; Bonds Lower.

New York, Feb. 7.—Lower prices gave the financial week a poor start, and the dullness of trading added to the conservatism of the views held on immediate developments. Turnover in stocks was around 525,000 shares, the smallest since August 3 of last year, when the dog days were beginning. United States and other bonds declined, as did most of the commodity futures markets. Cotton softened. May wheat closed unchanged at 94¾ cents a bushel. Dollars weakened among the foreign exchanges.

Stocks opened with moderate losses in the majority, with Steel down more than a point, after which the tone softened a little, but the insipidity of the trading turned bullish tastes sour and prices gave way slowly during the later proceedings. Steel, Chrysler, Bethlehem, Allied Chemical and a few others were down a point. A handful of stocks turned strong, prominent among them being American Can, which ran up 2 points. Minneapolis Honneywell again was an exceedingly erratic stock and closed lower. For the past few days the range of the stock has been wide and the price touchy.

Opening prices for the most part were the best of the day. Whether the lack of concentration of either buying or selling orders at any time during the trading was a bull or a bear point depended upon the point of view, but the net result of the trading was to add a bit to the Wall street market fog. Telephone was less active, with a slight tendency to sag, but with no recurrence of the brisk liquidation of recent days.

Cup of Dishwater.

Orders received and the ease or difficulty in procuring them and the volume of sales at present create what is known as business sentiment, but optimism and the lack of it at the same time spring from what the businessman sees and hears, and that in turn influences the orders he places. Buds on the trees are beginning to swell a trifle under the benign influence of the warmer weather, and businessmen report a mild increase in trade here and there, as is natural at this time of year. All that helps to hold in check the liquidation which on general principles threatens at times to engulf the securities markets.

Merely from a reading of the newspaper headlines, which in the great majority of cases lean far over to the sunny side of the Street in reporting the news, a businessman scarcely would grow enthusiastic over the outlook. He was confronted today by such reminders as the start of wage negotiations in the steel industry, led by United States Steel; the proposal for a Federal law to force Federal incorporation of all business; the plan for speedy work in the House on a new farm bonus and crop-fixing bill; greater tension among Japan, Great Britain and the United States over naval construction; unrest in the German army; the decline in bank depositors' debit balances and the slackness of the steel trade's operations.

Interest Rates.

Interest rates in New York felt the weight of a seasonal return flow of currency and the shrinkage in commercial demand that is accompanying the business depression and slackened in January, according to the monthly survey of the Federal Reserve Board. The average rate charged customers by banks here was 2.36 per cent, against 2.40 per cent in December and 2.50 per cent in January a year ago. The rate hardened a shade in other Northern and Eastern cities, but softened in Southern and Western centers. Last year in January interest rates were stiffening under the influence of the higher reserve requirements and expanding loans.

Steel.

A brokerage house analyst suggests that the $50,000,000 bank loan of the United States Steel Corporation casts a shadow upon the preferred dividend. That may be true in so far as, had profit been larger, the cash could have been obtained out of current income or by the sale of common stock. Preferred stockholders will nevertheless feel reassurance over the fact that the Steel directors felt confident enough about the outlook to continue the large capital improvements undertaken a year ago. Had the directors entertained serious doubts as to the preferred dividend, they scarcely would have gone ahead with their spending program.

Cotton Pickings.

A leading figure in the cotton market who lately visited the Southern cotton reaches has come back from the stronghold of Democracy with the feeling that the New Deal is losing ground in spite of efforts to hold up the price of cotton. He said he saw four men out of a hundred interviewed who were for the New Deal leader, but that probably wouldn't affect the voting to any great extent once candidates are picked. This observer thinks the cotton bill now prepared is designed for the principal purpose of making the earnest Mr. Wallace, now Secretary of Agriculture, a candidate for the Presidential nomination. He says he finds many Southerners who doubt that the impounding provisions of the cotton bill will get through Congress.

Survey.

Senior Vice President J. L. Beven, of the Illinois Central, at the request of the Delaware & Hudson directors, has completed a two weeks' survey of operating and maintenance conditions on the D. & H. The fact that such a survey was made by an outsider lends color to the recent rumors of managerial changes on the D. & H. Whatever takes place, the chances are heavily against a shift of Beven from the Illinois Central.

Curb Exchange.

With the exception of wide fluctuations in a handful of stocks with thin markets, trading on the Curb Exchange was the dullest and narrowest in a long time. Approximately 50,000 shares changed hands during the first three hours, against 90,000 in the same period last Friday. Pennsylvania Salt, which lost 15 points last week, regained 5. National Power preferred declined further to a yield of more than 13 per cent. Carolina Power preferred dropped nearly 5 points on its first appearance. United Shoe Machinery was unable to hold an early fractional gain. Pepperell rose a point or so. Aluminum, Ltd., hardened. Hecla Mining receded.

General Motors.

General Motors was expected to vote a small dividend—25 cents a share was the usual guess—at the directors' meeting after the close of the market this afternoon. A year ago 25 cents a share was voted, that being a period of uncertainty because of the strikes. This time it is sales uncertainty that is giving most worry. A month ago President Knudsen estimated 1937 profits at $4.48 a share, against $3.46 turned in the first nine months.

Slump to Be Brief, Major Angas Says

Is trade likely to get appreciably worse? Improbable.

Will the depression be short or long? Short.

If trade remains as now, are stocks cheap? Dear; and they will become dearer as commodity prices are cut.

On what current earnings ratio are stocks probably selling now? Average about 5 per cent.

General Motors Votes 25 Cents On Its Common

Regular Quarterly Dividend Also Declared on $5 Preferred.

New York, Feb. 7 (AP).—General Motors Corporation, which paid a dividend on its common stock throughout the depression years, kept its record intact today when the directors declared a 25-cent disbursement on the common, payable March 12 to stockholders of record February 17.

This is the same amount paid by the company a year ago at this time, when it was in the midst of labor difficulties. This year, despite unfavorable business conditions, the 25-cent payment was anticipated in Wall Street circles. The financial district subsequently turned its attention to the expected meeting of Chrysler directors later this week.

General Motors directors also declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 on the $5 preferred stock. These disbursements totaled approximately $13,200,000 in all—around $2,345,000 on the preferred and $10,800,000 on the common. The corporation paid a total of $3.75 on the common in 1937.

Listed Bond Values Drop in January

New York, Feb. 7 (AP).—Bond issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange as of February 1 totaled 1,378 with an aggregate par value of $47,910,357,663 and a market value of $42,486,316,399. The average price was 88.68 per $100 bond.

As of January there were 1,376 issues with a par value of $47,694,471,418 and a market value of $42,782,348,673. Average price stood at $89.70.

New York, Feb. 7 (AP).—Cotton was easier today in sympathy with the action of foreign markets and under hedge selling. May sold off from 8.63 to 8.58 and closed at 8.61, with final prices 2 to 7 points net lower.

The market opened lower under a little foreign selling but the undertone was steady on trade and scattered buying. Prices worked back to, or within a few points of, the previous close by late in the morning but hedging through spot houses increased and quotations reacted to net losses of 5 to 9 points.

House Enacts Picketing Ban At Embassies

Passage Sends Measure Urged by Hull, to White House.

Picketing in front of foreign embassies in Washington hereafter will be prohibited, unless a permit is issued by the superintendent of police, under provisions of a bill passed by the House yesterday and sent to the White House.

Sponsored by the State Department, the measure carries a maximum penalty of $100 fine or 60 days imprisonment or both for violation of the act.

Must Stay 500 Feet Away.

Picketing is interpreted as the displaying of any flag, banner or placard "or device designed or adapted to intimidate, coerce or bring into public odium and foreign government, party or organization, or any officer or officers thereof."

The prohibition extends over an area "within 500 feet of any building or premises" occupied by a foreign legation or embassy.

The State Department, in submitting the bill to the Senate and House Foreign Affairs Committees, said:

"The object of the resolution is to offer the same protection to foreign diplomatic and consular officers and their embassies, legations and consulates in the District that we are urging foreign governments to grant to our diplomatic and consular officers and our embassies, legations and consulates in their respective countries.

Missions Sanctuaries.

"Our citizens in foreign countries in the event of disturbances in such countries must rely in many cases upon the sanctuary universally granted to our embassies, legations and consulates. Our immediate and pressing obligation at the present time is to protect our citizens in foreign countries or in portions of foreign countries where disturbances exist."

Secretary of State Cordell Hull, in a supplementary letter, added:

"If we are to obtain for our representatives in foreign countries that degree of protection to which they are entitled, we should be in a position to show a like consideration for representatives of other governments in this country. Unless we extend such reasonable protection to representatives of other countries, we cannot hope to receive protection for our representatives abroad."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Hilda Burke and John Charles Thomas brought Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's season of morning musicales to a pleasant close yesterday in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom, which was filled with demonstrative auditors. The joint recital of the two artists from the Metropolitan Opera, each assisted by an expert and discreet pianist, provided a striking contrast between two types of vocalism: the robust power and dramatic intensity of Mr. Thomas and the tender lyricism and wistful appeal of Miss Burke. Both singers were in excellent voice and delighted their admirers which could have been longer without exhausting the evident enthusiasm.

Miss Burke began her share of the recital with the aria "Vedrai, carino," from "Don Giovanni," sung with a charming grace of phrase. Her second offering was a group composde of Respighi's "Nebbie," Fourdrain's "Le Papillon," Ravel's "La Flute Enchantee," a nocturne by Joseph Marx, and the Ave Maria from Bruch's "Das Feuerkreutz." In her readings, the delicacy of her tone was seldom forced by emotional stress.

After the Mozartian duet, "La ci darem la mano," with Mr. Thomas, she presented "O Sleep" from Handel's "Semele," "Hugo Wolf's "I'm not as other lassies are," Rakhmaninov's "In the Harvest Field," and the Russian folk song, "Troika," the last two sung, as the Wolf lyric should have been, in the original language.

The operatic aria selected by Mr. Thomas was "Promesse de mon avenir" from Massenet's "Le Roi de Lahore," delivered with splendid resonance. His first group contained Donaudy's "O del mio amato ben," Augusta Holmes' "Au Pays," Pierne's "En Barque" and Ravel's "Chanson a Boire." In each of these his apt sense of style was aided by his mimicry in characterization.

At his last appearance he alternated straight singing, in William Armes Fisher's arrangement of "The Minstrel Boy" and Carroll Hollister's "Rhymes of a Rover," with histrionic recitation in Cyril Scott's arrangement of the Scotch ballad "Lord Randall" and Albert Hay Malotte's "David and Goliath."

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra in the first students' concert of the season Monday afternoon in Central High School auditorium. Program: "Carneval Overture" (Dvorak), Second Movement from Suite in D major (Bach), "Dance of the Spirits" from "Orfeo ed Euridice" (Gluck), Rondo (Haydn), Allegretto from Symphony No. 7 (Beethoven), "By the Lake" and "Mosquito Dance" (Paul White), "Sailors' Dance" from "Krasni Mak" (Glier).

Were one asked for evidence of the value of the National Symphony Orchestra's concerts for young people, one could adduce the intentness with which yesterday's audience in Central High School listened to the allegretto movement from Beethoven's seventh symphony, which is not diverting music. Among the auditors were plenty whose extreme youth would excuse restlessness and impatience, yet their attention was a model for concert-hall behavior. They were coming early under the spell of music which will later unfold for them a richer meaning.

Neither was there fidgeting and rustling of programs during the performance of two other serious pieces: that meditative movement of Bach's known as the air for the G string and the melancholy sweetness of the Elysian Fields scene from Gluck's "Orpheus." Here again one observed the process of musical thought making its impress upon minds in the formative stage.

Not all the compositions were of such import, however, and there was entertainment in the robust "Carneval Overture" of Dvorak, a lively Haydn rondo, two of the amusing "Five Miniatures" by Paul White, and the rollicking sailors' dance from Glier's ballet, "Krasni Mak."

Dr. Kindler, in his dual role as expositor and conductor, combined humor with instruction in his inimitable way. His genial informality, his apt and unexpected illustrations in the explanation of form and instrumentation, and his contagious zest make him a guide whom it is a pleasure to follow.

Washington Chamber Music Society presents the Pro Musica Quartet (Frederick Dvonch, Jeno Sevely, Ralph Hersh and William Brennand) and Richard Moore in the Phillips Memorial Gallery Monday afternoon. Program: Quartet in F minor, Op. 95 (Beethoven), "By the Tarn" (Eugene Goossens), Quintet in E flat major for horn and strings (Mozart).

* * * *

Hurrying from their posts of duty at the students' concert, five members of the National Symphony Orchestra settled down to an enjoyable performance for the Washington Chamber Music Society at the third candlelight concert of the season. Not only was the string foursome poised and collected in the reading of Beethoven's "Serious" F minor quartet, but their playing was the best that they have done since the beginning fo the series. The horn of Richard Moore was mellow and smooth in the Mozart quintet.

Fully justified is the nickname which has been applied to the Beethoven quartet, for it is singularly free from the boisterous sallies which the composer was wont to make. Its thoughtful calm is unbroken save in the second allegro, where a little gayety comes through, and its lyrical quality has a subdued tenderness.

The lovely Mozart quintet, very commendably played, is magical in its lightsome dialogues between horn and strings. This composition, like many another by various composers, owes its existence to a friendship. Mozart wrote it for Joseph Leutgeb, a horn-player from Salzburg, who had settled in Vienna. He was so excellent a performer that there was no need to simplify the horn part, and the result was a fluent and charming interplay of timbres.

Concert by the Bucknell University Men's Glee Club in Woodward Hall, Calvary Baptist Church, Monday night. Program of miscellaneous choruses, solos, folk ballads of coal miners, and university songs.

* * * *

Under the direction of Melvin LeMon, the men's glee club of Bucknell University, some 60 voices strong, gave a concert last evening for an audience that nearly filled Woodward Hall. The singing had that earnest and forthright quality which pertains to collegiate groups for whom music is more of a recreation than a study. The massed tone was firm and robust, the attack precise, and the rhythm well accentuated.

The repertoire included Grieg's "Land-Sighting," Schubert's "Omnipotence," Hammond's setting of Scott's "Lochinvar," Bortnianski's "Cherubic Hymn," Sibelius' "Finlandia," Riegger's arrangement of Campbell-Tipton's "A Spirit Flower," Forsythe's "Old King Cole," and Horton "Tip Sams."

An interesting feature of the concert was the group of ballads, "Down in a Coal Mine," "When the Breaker Starts Up Full Time" and "The Broken Shovel," collected and arranged by Melvin LeMon. These ballads are genuine folk songs of comparatively recent origin, having been found among the anthracite coal miners of Pennsylvania, and their subject matter are the incidents of daily life in the mines and above ground.

Two Shot to Death After Auto Party

The girl, Teresa Trainella, arrested several times in disturbances here, died of wounds in her head and stomach.

Eduardo Hurtado, alias Ortedo, 30, was her companion. Police Lieut. John Valley described Hurtado as a small-time gambler and said the shooting followed a quarrel between the girl and Hurtado.

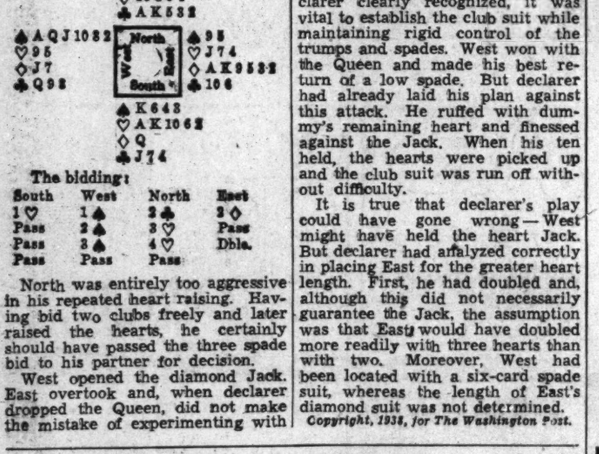
Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

No Quarter Asked.

To "put one over" on gullible opponents may be a pleasant experience. But the real soul-satisfying thrill comes from defeating an enemy worthy of our steel. In today's hand the declarer had nothing presented to him—he had to work out his own salvation.

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	1 ♠	3 ♣	3 ◇
Pass	3 ♠	3 ♡	Pass
Pass	3 ♠	4 ♡	Dble.
Pass	Pass	Pass

North was entirely too aggressive in his repeated heart raising. Having bid two clubs freely and later raised the hearts, he certainly should have passed the three spade bid to his partner for decision.

West opened the diamond Jack. East overtook and, when declarer dropped the Queen, did not make the mistake of experimenting with a diamond continuation in the hope that the Queen was a false card and that declarer really had started with two diamonds. East saw that dummy's club suit was a menace and the only attack on it was through dummy's trumps so that the heart Queen could not be a third-round entry to the club suit, if and when established. On this basis East shrewdly returned the spade nine. Declarer ducked, and West signaled with the eight-spot. A second spade lead was ruffed in dummy, and declarer then led a low club toward his own Jack. As declarer clearly recognized, it was vital to establish the club suit while maintaining rigid control of the trumps and spades. West won with the Queen and made his best return of a low spade. But declarer had already laid his plan against this attack. He ruffed with dummy's remaining heart and finessed against the Jack. When his ten held, the hearts were picked up and the club suit was run off without difficulty.

It is true that declarer's play could have gone wrong—West might have held the heart Jack. But declarer had analyzed correctly in placing East for the greater heart length. First, he had doubled and, although this did not necessarily guarantee the Jack, the assumption was that East would have doubled more readily with three hearts than with two. Moreover, West had been located with a six-card spade suit, whereas the length of East's diamond suit was not determined.

CONSTITUTION HALL, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, at 8 P. M.

DALE CARNEGIE

B. Pd., B.C.S., F.R.G.S. Litt. D.

Dale Carnegie has trained more business men to talk effectively than any other living man. During the past 26 years, more than 20,000 men and women have profited by his courses in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, London and Paris. He has trained some of the most famous men in the nation. His latest book, "How to Win Friends and Influence People," sold more copies during its first year of publication than any other non-fiction book in all history. Articles about Dale Carnegie and the significance of his work appeared in the American Magazine, January, 1932; Readers' Digest, July, 1935, and in the Saturday Evening Post, August 14, 1937.

15 THINGS THIS TRAINING WILL HELP YOU DO . . .

1. THINK ON YOUR FEET and speak extemporaneously before business conferences, clubs, organizations, dinners.
2. DEVELOP COURAGE AND SELF-CONFIDENCE. Destroy fear. Cure an inferiority complex.
3. INCREASE YOUR POISE, polish and personal force both in business interviews and before groups.
4. "SELL" YOURSELF, YOUR SERVICES, your product, your enthusiasms.
5. WIN MORE FRIENDS by increasing your knowledge of practical psychology, your skill in human relations.
6. IMPROVE YOUR MEMORY, speak without notes and recall names and faces.
7. WRITE MORE EFFECTIVE LETTERS.
8. ENRICH YOUR COMMAND OF ENGLISH.
9. READ MORE WORTHWHILE BOOKS.
10. BECOME A LEADER in your business or profession through your ability to speak.
11. BECOME A MORE ENTERTAINING CONVERSATIONALIST.
12. INCREASE YOUR INCOME by developing the ability to handle people. John D. Rockefeller, Sr., once said: "I will pay more for the ability to handle people than for any other ability under the sun."
13. INSPIRE YOU WITH NEW IDEAS. You will participate in and listen to 1500 short talks—talks that will broaden your interest and jar you out of a rut.
14. KNOW INTIMATELY FORTY AMBITIOUS MEN AND WOMEN. In these classes you will form friendships that will last a lifetime.
15. DEVELOP YOUR LATENT POWERS and improve your personality. Professor William James of Harvard declared that the average man develops only 10 per cent of his mental powers.

How This Course Is Conducted

You will meet one evening a week for sixteen weeks as one of a group of 40 business men and women.

These meetings will be held in private dining rooms of hotels and restaurants. Each group will be strictly limited to forty.

This course consists of 40 sessions. You will speak at 29 of these sessions, which will be held at the rate of two a night—one around the dinner table from 6 to 7:45 and one from 8 to 10:30.

Your instructors will tell you what is right with your talk and what is wrong with it, and how to remedy and improve it. Every member of the class will write his suggestions for improving your talk; so when you finish, you will have the instructor's criticism and the comments of 39 of your fellow students. Your audience will be sympathetic; all in the same boat.

As a result of this training, you will soon develop courage and self-possession. You will learn to think on your feet. You will conquer fear; and "fear," said Elbert Hubbard, "defeats more men than any other one thing in the world."

As the course progresses, you will be shown how to plan and prepare and construct your talks, how to illustrate your points, how to be clear, how to be entertaining, how to be impressive and convincing.

You will be shown how to win confidence, how to get everyone agreeing at the outset, how to state your proposals, how to appeal to the motives that produce action. You will be taught how to appear to advantage before a group, how to remember what you want to say, how to begin and how to end your talks.

You will be trained to use four easy steps that will make your talks click. You will be drilled to think quickly on your feet and talk under the rapid-fire conditions of modern conference-room discussion. You will be trained to increase your stock of words and to speak with more resonance, more attractiveness.

Make Yourself Quickly and Favorably Known

Theodore Alvy, Chief Engineer of La Cour Iron Works, attended monthly meetings of the American Association of Engineers for twelve years without being able to say a word. After completing this training, he rose at one of their meetings and spoke for twelve minutes. He was then invited to be the principal speaker at the next meeting. He was soon appointed to committees, made a director and invited to become president.

"I made more friends," said Mr. Alvy, "and acquired more prestige by one twelve-minute talk than I had been able to do in a dozen years as a silent, inarticulate member."

Hundreds of other students have had similar experiences. So can you at meetings in your business or community.

Who runs the meetings you attend, the organizations to which you belong? Have you ever sat glued to your chair through fear and let men with less ability stand up and control things simply because they had the courage, confidence and the ability to think on their feet—and you did not? By speaking you can double your influence almost anywhere.

One man came from Havana, Cuba, last season to take this course to prepare for one three-minute speech. He knew that one short talk might have a decided effect on his future.

Increase Your Earning Power

An exhaustive study was made at Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, to determine the causes of business success. As a result, it was declared that about 85% of success in business is due, not to superior knowledge, but to superior personality and the superior ability to influence others. The whole purpose of this course is to develop that ability.

Dale Carnegie will give his famous talk on "How to Win Friends and Influence People." This lecture is extremely practical. It makes men more tactful and trains them to avoid criticism and argument.

It trains them to give honest appreciation, and to talk, not about what they want, but about what the other fellow wants.

After hearing this talk, you will be asked to apply these principles in your everyday business contacts and then come to the next session and speak about the new results you have achieved.

If we described here all the things this training will do for you, it would sound like wild exaggeration. So we have prepared a booklet containing the names and addresses of 520 men who have recently completed this course. You are invited to write or telephone them and discover for yourself precisely how they have profited by it. We have prepared another booklet outlining the course and showing the program for each session. Both booklets will be given out at the meeting Thursday night. If you can't be present Thursday night, come to the Organization Meetings on Monday, Feb. 14, and Tuesday, Feb. 15, at the CARLTON HOTEL, 8 P. M. No cost. No obligation.

LOWELL THOMAS

Lowell Thomas says: "I have known Dale Carnegie for twenty-three years. In 1919, I prevailed upon him to accompany me to London; and on our voyage across the Atlantic, he helped me revise and improve my talk, and coached me on its delivery. He remained abroad as my general manager. My intimate association with Dale Carnegie convinced me that he is a genius in getting other men to express themselves forcefully. He has developed a course that is unique; a striking combination of public speaking, salesmanship, human relations and applied psychology—a course that is as real as the measles and twice as much fun. A movement for adult education is sweeping over the nation today; and the most spectacular force in that movement is Dale Carnegie."
